After Her Husband's Bellows. Mr. Lem Felcher has gone to Boston after that hundred dollars which he says a horse dealer tried to "do" him out of. While on his road to the States, this gentleman, who has just been arrested, borrowed a hundred dollars of Mr. Felcher on the strength of a draft drawn on a Boston house. The cheque turned out to be of no value, and Mr. Felcher accordingly put the case in the hands of a firm of detectives, with the result that the horse dealer is now in custody.

The Obsequies of Len. A special London service was directed in All Saints' church last night by Rev. Mr. Hartley. Next Sunday evening Rev. Mr. Armitage will preach his second sermon in the course for Sunday evenings on "What the Church has and yet has not." This evening the second lecture on "The Life of St. Paul" will be delivered in St. Luke's church, Ashburnham, and on Sunday evening the second sermon of the course entitled "Types of Christian Service" will be preached.

Fancy Skating. The exhibition of trick and fancy skating, by Mr. E. J. Hartley, of Peterboro, took place as advertised, on the rink here on Friday night. Mr. Hartley's performance was worthy of a far larger attendance than there was. He executed a variety of movements, comprising changes of edges, inside and out, serpentines, cross cuts, double eights, single foot spins, double foot whirles, lock foot spins, waltz step and others.—Campbellford Herald.

The Forpe Whistles. The local Conservatives are restless after the severe drubbing they received in the two Peterboroughs, and there is talk of a protest. Just what is to be gained by protesting the election in either riding does not appear. It will, naturally, take a few days for them to cool off. There would be some sense in unseating the members-elect if the Conservatives were on top in Toronto, but not otherwise.

WILL MR. DRYDEN HAVE A PETERBOROUGH SEAT?

What Rumor is Saying—The Ex-Minister of Agriculture May Succeed Mr. Blezard—Latest News of the Political Situation

It is currently rumored in town that Mr. John Dryden, the late Minister of Agriculture, who was defeated in South Ontario by Mr. Calder, is casting about him for a safe seat, and that East Peterborough may be open for him. Should the report prove correct, Mr. Dryden will no doubt be elected by a large majority, as the East riding is an agricultural one, and the honor of having a Cabinet Minister as their representative would in all probability induce the farmers to give him a triumphant election. We have not been able to see Mr. Blezard as to what foundation there is for the rumor; but we venture to think that, although it would be a difficult matter for the East riding to have a more popular representative than the present member, Mr. Blezard would be public spirited enough to make way for Mr. Dryden should the exigencies of the Government's position demand the expediency of such a change being adopted.

So far as the general political situation is concerned, the claims of the two parties are conflicting. The Toronto World maintains that there is a majority of one in 93 seats, with an election yet to be held in Russell. It is contended that the following list is reliable:

TRADE WITH BRITAIN

How England Can Extend Her Business with Canada

Interesting Details—The Advantage of the Yankees—Possible British Trade—in small Cheap Wares—As to Gas Fittings—Also in Oil and

A very interesting interview appears in the Ironmonger, of London, Eng.,
It was had a few days ago with Mr.
Sigmund Samuel, of Samuel, Benjamin & Co., the big Toronto hardware firm. Mr. Samuel has been combining business with pleasure in Europe, and the United Kingdom and in the course of his travel, dropped in to the Ironmonger office.

After he had explained the working of the preferential tariff, Mr. Samuel was asked:

"But are not most of the United States goods you now buy so well suited for your requirements that they will still find a sale in spite of the difficulty in duty? Are you not quite Americanized?"

Here Mr. Samuel came out strong.
He said: "As for being Yankeeized (I suppose that is what you mean), far from it. There is a very deep feeling of ill-will towards the Yankee all over Canada. The States have treated us shabbily in commercial matters. Britain has treated us well, and we are anxious to transfer to her all the trade we can. That feeling is genuine, and worth a good deal. But it is quite true that the States produce many things more suited to our wants.
The States have to buy, and their production is so well organized in the States that I fancy British makers will not be able to drive out the Yankees to any large extent."

Mr. Samuel proceeded to tell the Ironmonger where British traders could do business in Canada. Among other things he said:

"United States tinplates have not yet made their appearance in Canada, but we are living in daily dread of their advent. So far, the Welsh plates hold the market. There has lately been a great falling off, though, in the demand for roofing plates. These are only used in the southwest, where the climate is mild. In the west and northwest tiles or felt and gravel are used."

"Britain has an excellent chance of increasing her Canadian trade in fire brass, lumps, and all better grades of brassware. She already does most of the trade in these goods, but the demand is increasing every year, and will grow of course, as our purchasing power increases. But in certain small goods the Yankees have already the whole trade and I am afraid they will continue to command the market, no matter what the duty. Small curtain rings, for instance, you do not seem able to produce at competing prices."

"And, by the way, why will not your people realize that there is an enormous market for cheap flashy goods —things of little substance, but fairly nice appearance? Surely you might, with great advantage to yourselves, imitate the Germans (pardon the expression) and begin to cater for this trade, all the more because, so far as Canada is concerned, you have but little chance of gaining the market in heavy brassware goods, inasmuch as we make these ourselves, and even the Yankees have not been able to get a look in that trade."

"United States cutlery! We never see it in Canada. Roughly, about three-fourths of the cutlery used in Canada is British, the rest German.
All table cutlery is British."

"Gasfittings? No! I'm afraid you have little chance in gasfittings. You do not make the right kind here; we do not use the ball and chain model.
As for stoves, why, we export them to England ourselves. But in gas fires and fittings you people could probably work up a good trade. They are already doing something in that way.
Your electric light fittings are really too good for us. A certain quantity of British-made locks has always been sold in the Dominion. But most of your locks—rim locks, for instance—are not the patterns we want. You have a good chance, however, in the padlock trade. As regards hinges, our barn door, heavy T, and strap hinges are Canadian; the lighter hinges come from the States; but you could capture this trade by using the best machinery for rolling and cutting out the plates."

"I should say you stand a fair chance in barbed wire and binder twine, and as an excellent one in millinery. Our mining industries are only just beginning to be developed. And the bulk of the future trade in the new northern gold region will take its way over the Canadian Pacific. British saws and planes are already imported to a fair extent, and in many departments of heavy hardware, British makers, if they will take the trouble, may gain a good deal.
In iron there is a little chance. Our bar iron is mostly made in Montreal. As from pig iron, we made 80,000 tons of last year, and are gradually beginning to make our own steel."

"Then you will have an excellent opportunity of gaining ground in oils, paints, colors, and varnishes, and in china and glassware. The United States rifle, I am afraid, has too big a hold upon our market to be displaced. The shotguns we use are mostly British already, and a great deal of British-made powder is sold."

"And now, Mr. Samuel, in conclusion, 'I think I have given you a fair outline of British trade prospects in Canada under the new tariff. Remember, we are anxious to put in your way all the trade we can. It is for you Britons to make the most of our good-will by treating us fairly, by showing yourselves as progressive in your manufacturing methods as the Yankees, as pushful as the Germans, and as straightforward and solid in your work as well, as you have always had the reputation of being."

DOWNFALL OF A COUNTESS

OLD, DISHEVELED, RAGGED AND DISHEVELED, SHE GOES TO THE PENITENTIARY AS A VAG-RANT.

From the Brooklyn Citizen.

A woman, probably 60 years old, with hair disheveled, and dressed in rags, with years of dissipation plainly marked in her face, was committed by Magistrate Lemon this morning on a charge of vagrancy.

"What is your name?" asked the magistrate.

The woman replied: "Angelica Kruger."

"All right, Mrs. Kruger," continued the magistrate, "you will go to jail for six months."

Magistrate Lemon did not know that he had committed Countess Eva Angelica de Jugatevitch, but he had.

The woman is a genuine countess, but to look at her, as she stood before the bar, in her rags and filth, with the odor of whiskey about her no one would suspect her aristocratic connections.

Countess Eva has a remarkable history, one which sounds more like fiction than reality. She is a Jew, and to begin with she married a Jew, despite the protests of her father and relatives. Her father threatened to disinherit her, but he couldn't do this for her mother, who had been immensely wealthy in her own name.

But the girl, forsooth, had bought his title. He made love to Eva and captured her young heart. They eloped to this country, where the baron spent all of her money and then died.

"How old are you?" asked the reporter.

The countess replied: "I'm just 34 years old. That is, I have been out in the world about that length of time. When I arrived here and was married to the baron it did not take me long to learn that he had married me for my money."

"You're looking and feel that I was I should have known that he was only after my money. Several weeks after our arrival the baron gently, but firmly, told me that he didn't want me to go on the street."

"Jealous! No, he wasn't a bit jealous, but he was ashamed of me. I wasn't good looking enough for him.
He had a very enjoyable time, however, and year after year my money diminished away. Yes I speak pretty good English. I talk seven different languages, and I must say that my education was not neglected. Had I been as good looking as I was educated, everything would have gone on lovely, as they say. But then, you know, we have nothing to do with our looks."

The countess's father, who was a great criminal lawyer, married a Jewess, who had piles of money and good looks.

"He forgot what he had done," said the old woman, "and when I wanted to marry a Jew, even with a title, he looked like a steer, as they say."

Twelve or thirteen years ago the woman married, so she says, Dr. Emil Kruger, who then lived at No. 727 Flushing Avenue. The doctor lived only a couple of years after the marriage. Since then she has been going down, down, down, until now she is a total wreck. I beg pardon, she was learned, she was arrested for vagrancy, and was committed to the penitentiary for six months.

The countess said she had a furnished room at No. 160 Bayard Street.
This morning she was found in Flushing Avenue with a bottle of whiskey in her pocket. She was arrested by Policeman Kelly of the Stagg Street station. It is said that the woman has a son living somewhere in Union Avenue. She has not seen him for some time.

Many amateur vocalists who boast that their voices could fill a church, fall to remark that the same voices could likewise empty it.

The friend who tells only the nice things she hears about and keeps all the nasty ones to herself is the one with whom we are apt to be most intimate.

DRIVE AWAY THE DREADFUL DREAMS.

"A Dream cometh of a multitude of business," says an ancient Hebrew proverb. Yes, and of many things besides business. The wisest man on earth knows no more than you do about how the body and the mind live and work together. All we know is that the condition of the body gives character and direction to the action of the mind, whether we wake or sleep. And the reverse is also largely true. The method of it is a mystery, and its no use trying to fathom it. The facts, and how far we can control them, are all we need to trouble ourselves about.

Here, for example, is a woman who says that at a certain time she was disturbed with frightful dreams. They so broke her sleep and tired her out that she rose from her bed in the morning more exhausted than after a hard day's labour. That is exactly as it would be, if, without waking you, somebody should lance one of your veins and draw away a big bowlful of blood.

The ailment which led to this result began, she says, in June, 1891. At first there was nothing she could give a name to. She found herself weary, languid, and fatigued, as after a long and arduous journey; yet she had not left home nor done any unusual work. She lost her life and energy as she might have lost a shilling, without an idea how it came to pass.

"I had a foul taste in my mouth," she says, "and no wish to eat. After taking the least morsel I at once began to suffer pain in the chest and between the shoulder blades. My head got so bad that when I rose suddenly from the chair, or stooped for any purpose, everything seemed to go whirling around me, and I felt as if I must fall to the ground."

At this point she speaks of her terrible dreams, already alluded to, and then continues: "My hands and feet were cold and clammy, and I became pale and was as death. All the blood seemed to be gone from me. In the night—beide the awful dreams—I was troubled with sweats which took away the remnant of my strength."

"With all this, and with lack of power to relish and digest food, I came to be so low-spirited and weak that I gave up going outside the house. And what gave me most anxiety was a fear that I was going into a decline, my father and sister having died of consumption. Every day I grew weaker until my husband and friends gave up all hopes of me. I had medical treatment, but it did not avail."

"While in this condition, about as much dead as alive my husband read in a little book of the cures wrought, often in desperate cases, by Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup. He urged me to try it, but I answered him indifferently, having no faith in it. However, he got me a bottle at Mr. C. E. Davies', chemist, King-street, Corner, and after having used it for only a week I realized an improvement. My appetite was better, and what I ate agreed with me and gave me more strength. This, as you may suppose, made me hopeful; and I willingly consented to continue with this medicine—the only one that had done me any good. Briefly, then, after having taken two bottles more was completely cured, and have kept well ever since. I have related these facts to many persons, and you are at liberty to publish them, if you wish, for the guidance of others similarly afflicted. Signed, Mrs. Anne Davies, Cilaradu, Conwil, near Carmarthen, December 6th, 1894."

That Mrs. Davies did not have organic disease of the lungs, consumption, is shown by her rapid and complete recovery. But she had a disease which simulates consumption, and is, in a large sense, even more dangerous—chronic inflammatory dyspepsia, learnedly called gastritis. This disease, with its sequences, sweep away more lives than consumption and is infinitely more productive of suffering. Yet, Mother Seigel's Syrup will cure it. Let us keep that fact always before our minds.

It is no longer considered good form to keep step with the individual with whom you are walking. An ex-convict must have started this mode, the union in promenade being too sadly suggestive perhaps.

FOUGHT CATARRH FOR FIFTY YEARS.

Eighty Years of age When victory came—Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder the one Remedy.

George Lewis, of Shamokin, Pa., says: "I was troubled with catarrh for fifty years. I am eighty years old. I used a great many catarrh remedies but Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder was the one medicine that gave immediate relief and cured me of the disease." At Ottawa, D. M. Northrop, prominent member of the Civil Service, used this medicine and tells of its benefits in the case of catarrh and colic in the head. It relieves in ten minutes.

BIRTH ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Some of the Various Ways in Which Newspapers Print Them.

Of all the things that appear in the regular and ordinary "make-up" of a newspaper, birth notices are perhaps the most amusing. They find their way into both metropolitan and country newspapers. The latter especially teem with them. The town roads correspondents seem to have a current of important items, hence their frequent appearance in the "Pink Line" Epistle. Some papers have particular columns or spaces devoted to birth, marriage and obituary news. Other record the same events under the title "Grades," "Altar" and "Tomb," while a third class use three words in the headline, "Yells," "Hills" and "Knells."

The following are a few notices clipped at random from papers all over the United States and Canada, says The Chicago Times-Herald. Some are to the point, while others convey more information than is necessary:

McDonald—May 23, 1896, a daughter to Daniel and Emma L.

Albert Drinkie is a papa.

A little girl baby began its residence with Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Waitely Wednesday of last week.

A little son-bean came to brighten the home of Attorney J. C. Russell and wife on Thursday afternoon of last week.

What causes Charlie Prasulen to smile? Oh, it's a boy.

Tom Arnold reports a lovely little Bryanite at his house since Monday night. The little man is rather wee as yet.

Another new blacksmith came to Waco. For particulars see Albert Kidd.

A little city treasurer made its appearance at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Washburn last Saturday.

On Thursday eve of last week a little girl was left at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Cannon. As it was good looking they concluded to keep it until it was a year.

H. C. Sackett was all smiles on Saturday, and his friends found that good J. D.'s were none to good for them. A girl arrived at his house that day.

There will be another stocking to hang up at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George White in the south-west country this Christmas. It's a boy, and from the report we judge he is a dandy.

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Cox, Sunday night, twin girls. Dr. Dillon was in attendance, and says all are doing nicely. Ed, however, had to be watched closely by his friends for a day or two, but is out of danger now and is perfectly harmless.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reynolds have welcomed to their home a daughter, born Dec. 8.

N. H. Tracy now wears a 9 by 14 smile on his face, all on account of the arrival of a new dishwasher at his house the 16th ult.

Dr. Frank Kimble, the Leroy dentist, formerly of this city, takes his happiness in double doses. He is the father of twins.

FEDERAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

FIFTEENTH ANNUAL STATEMENT

Fifteenth annual meeting of the officers of this Company was held at the head office in Hamilton on Tuesday, the 1st, inst. Mr. J. H. Beatty, President, was assisted by Mr. David J. Beatty, Chairman, and Mr. David J. Beatty, Managing Director, Secretary. Following report was submitted:

DIRECTORS' REPORT.
The Directors have pleasure in submitting to the shareholders the following report of the business of the company, together with a statement of the assets and liabilities for the year which closed on 31st December last, and of the assets and liabilities on that date.

New business consisted of sixteen hundred and fifty applications for insurance, aggregating $2,212,000, of which fifteen hundred and seventy-one applications for $2,104,000 were accepted. Applications for $108,000 have been rejected or held for further information.

Annuitants' premiums to the amount of $38,400 were also received.

During the past five years $7,000,000 of renewable term insurances have been replaced by higher premium policies—principally on limited payment life plans—through which means the premium income and reserve funds of the Company have been largely increased, though but little addition has been made to the amount of assurance at risk. These insurances are distributed over a greater number of years in smaller amounts than heretofore. The number of lives assured increased from 5,784 at the beginning of the year to 6,256 at its close, an addition of 472.

The income, exclusive of capital stock, was an increase of $46,156.50 over the previous year, and the assets an increase of $114,735.46, the income proper being $381,798.41 for the year, and the assets $722,416.27, exclusive of unallocated guarantee capital.

The security for policyholders, including guarantee capital, was at the close of the year $1,381,416.27, and the liabilities for reserves and all outstanding claims $818,481.33, leaving a surplus of $562,934.94. The surplus for policyholders was $103,968.94, plus for policyholders was $128,826, on forty-five lives, because claims through death, of which amount the Company was reimbursed for $23,000. In addition, each dividend and dividend applied to the reduction of premiums ($31,256.41), and a matured endowment of $2,000, total payments to policyholders amounted to $164,072.11.

In pursuance of the authority granted at the last annual meeting of the shareholders, the Directors have caused an application to the Parliament of Canada for a special Act of incorporation, with a view to facilitating the business and investments of the company. Up to the present time we have been doing business in all the provinces under a Provincial charter and Dominion license.

During the past few months there have been indications of a general improvement in business most encouraging in their character, most encouraging in their character, life insurance interests will share in the benefits arising therefrom.

The office and agency staff of the Company have given excellent service and are worthy of your commendation.

The accompanying Certificate from the Auditors vouches for the correctness of the statements submitted herewith, all accounts, securities, and vouchers having been examined by them.

JAMES BEATTY, President.
DAVID DEXTER, Managing Director.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

MAKE RICH, RED BLOOD

Rich, Red Blood Makes Weak People Bright Active and Strong.

Read the Evidence of Those Who Have Proved It.

PALE AND SALLOW GIRLS

If your daughter is pale, weak, "tired-out," troubled with headache, backache and pain in the side; if her development to womanhood is delayed, lose no time; use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They will assist her to develop properly and regularly, will enrich the blood, restore health's roses to the cheek, and danger of Consumption and premature death will be averted.

HEALTH FAILING—CURED.

Miss Eugenie Dorion, daughter of Capt. G. Dorion, Chateau Richer, Quebec, says:—"From my childhood I had been in delicate health and during the past few years while studying hard to obtain my diploma as a teacher, my health assumed such a critical condition that my friends thought I was going into consumption. I was treated by several doctors and took great quantities of drugs, but received no benefit. One day a friend who had herself been in delicate health, and who was built up by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, advised me to try them. I at once got a supply and from the time I began to take the second box I felt better, and when I had finished the tenth box I was in better health than I had ever been in my life before. I therefore do not hesitate to declare—and I understand my responsibility in making such a declaration—that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills deserve the confidence of the public."

ST. VITUS' DANCE.

This trouble usually occurs in the young. Irregular and involuntary movement of the arms, legs or head. Languidness, trembling of the hands. Sometimes older persons have it. In either case the surest, speediest cure is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

A MOTHER'S THANKS.

Her Child Suffered From St. Vitus' Dance—Lost the Use of Her Right Side and Almost Lost the Power of Speech.

Aylmer, Que., Gazette.

Of all the discoveries made in medicine in this great age of progress none have done more to alleviate human suffering than have Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. We suppose there is not a hamlet in this broad land in which the remarkable healing power of this favorite medicine has not been put to the test and proved triumphant. It is a great medicine and the good it has accomplished can only be faintly estimated. There are many in Aylmer who speak of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in terms of praise, and among them is the family of Mr. Smith, the well-known blacksmith and wheelwright. Having heard that his daughter, Miss Minnie, had been cured of St. Vitus' Dance by the use of these Pills, the Gazette called upon Mr. Smith to learn the particulars. Upon mentioning the matter to him he expressed pleasure in making the facts public, and remarked that he thought Mrs. Smith could probably give the particulars better than himself. Mrs. Smith said that about a year ago Minnie was attacked with St. Vitus' Dance, of a rather severe nature, and a number of medicines were tried, but without any effect upon the trouble. An electric battery was also used, but had no beneficial effect. The trouble appeared to be getting more severe, and finally Minnie was obliged to discontinue going to school, having lost the power of her right side. Her speech was also so much affected it was with difficulty she could be understood. She was out of school for about six months and all this time she was undergoing treatment which, however, proved ineffective. One day Mrs. Smith saw in the Gazette the particulars of a case of St. Vitus' Dance cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and determined to try them with Minnie. By the time two boxes were used Mrs. Smith was sensible of a great improvement in her daughter's condition, and after the use of four more boxes was satisfied that Minnie was completely cured, as no symptoms of the trouble remained. This was more than a year ago, and since that time there has not been the slightest recurrence of the dread disease. While Minnie was taking the pills her weight increased, and her general health was much improved.

DIABETES CURED.

Mr. Isaiah Gillard, Wales, Ont., writes:—"My niece, who has lived with me four years, suffered from troubles incident to girlhood and from what the doctors said was diabetes. In fact two doctors attended her for eight months and she was taking their prescriptions, but all the time getting weaker. We then decided to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial. When she began taking them her complexion was yellow, she was troubled with shortness of breath and seemed to have no blood and no relish for food. When she had completed the third box she was very much better, and when she had taken nine boxes her health was fully restored, and she is to-day as healthy a looking girl as you would wish to see. We have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to our acquaintances, and they are the most popular medicine in this section of the county."

Too Little Blood

Too little blood! That is what makes men and women look pale, sallow and languid. That is what makes them drag along, always tired, never hungry, unable to digest their food, breathless and palpitating at the heart after slight exertion, so that it is a trouble to go up stairs. They are "Anemic," doctors tell them; and that is Greek for having "too little blood." Are you like that?

Are your gums pale instead of being scarlet? Pull down your eyelid—Is the lining of it bloodshot and pale? That is where "too little blood" shows.

More anemic people have been made strong, energetic, hungry, cheerful men and women by

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People

than by any other means. They are the finest Tonic in the world; they have cured more people than any other medicine, but you must get the REAL Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, put up in packages just LIKE THIS

If your dealer does not keep them, or tries to persuade you to take something else, send the price, 50 cents a box or $2.50 for six boxes to the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, and get the genuine by return mail—postage paid.

A THANK OFFERING.

A Clergyman Writes on Behalf of grateful People—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Restored Their Health and They Wish Other Sufferers to Know It.

The following letter written by the Rev. Wm. Lawson, Methodist minister at Richbucto, N. B., attests in the strongest manner the merits of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and a perusal of it will suggest why this great medicine is so popular in thousands of homes throughout the Dominion—it cures when other medicines fail.

Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., N. B., April 26, 1897.

DEAR SIR:—I am glad to furnish you the following voluntarily given testimonial, with the fullest permission to give the names and place. They do this as a thank-offering to God and your medicine.

Mrs. Wm. Warman, of Molus River (near here) says her son Alden was sickly from birth. He could hardly ever retain food, and his parents had but little hopes that he would live long and the doctors who attended him were of the same opinion. Till seven years of age he continued in that condition. Then the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills was begun, and under their use he recovered and is now a strong, healthy boy. Mr. Warman, the boy's father, also adds his testimonial to the great value of Pink Pills, saying:—"I suffered for years with a bad back, until I used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and they cured me." Miss Annie Warman adds this evidence with much enthusiasm and did not know the blessing of good health till I took Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I used eight boxes and have since enjoyed the best of health. In fact I am never sick now."

Here you have three members of a family restored to health by the use of your medicine, and you would almost covet their good health and genial ways resulting from such health. They wish you to freely use these facts to help other sufferers, and I am able as their pastor to certify the facts above stated.

Wm. LAWSON, Methodist Minister.

A NEIGHBOR'S ADVICE.

The Means of Restoring a Little Girl to Health—She was Gradually Fading Away and Her Parents Doubted Her Recovery to Health.

From the Examiner Charlottetown.

Perhaps the most remarkable cure that has ever been recorded is that of little Minnie Wooside, of Baltic, P. E. I. Mr. and Mrs. Wooside are members of the Princetown Presbyterian church, and are well and favorably known in the settlement where they reside. A newspaper correspondent hearing of the remarkable recovery of this little girl, called on Mr. Wooside and ascertained the exact facts in the case. The following is substantially the result of the interview:—"About a year ago last June I first noticed that my little daughter was not as bright as usual and that she complained at times of pains in her head and chest. Up to that time she had regularly attended school and was remarkably clever for a child of her age. She did nothing but attend school and although I never supposed it would do her much injury, I allowed her to study too sedulously. Thinking that she was only run down I kept her from school for a few weeks and expected that she would be all right again. I was sadly disappointed in my expectations, however, as she rapidly grew weaker and lost flesh every day. I was alarmed about her condition when she complained of a soreness in her lungs, and began to cough. I was just preparing to take her to a doctor when a neighbor called to see her and advised us to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She assured me that the pills had restored her own daughter to health after several doctors had failed to do her any good. I therefore resolved to give them a trial and purchased a couple of boxes that very day. I began giving my little daughter the pills, being very careful to follow the directions. At the end of a month I noticed a decided improvement in her health, and thus encouraged, I continued using the pills three months more. Her health was quite restored by that time and she was able to attend school again. I regard my daughter's cure as almost marvellous, and accord all the credit to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. For little girls and boys with delicate constitutions no better remedy could possibly be prescribed. What was done for my little girl could certainly be done for other children."

Miss Amelia Kelly Tells of Her Illness and Subsequent Cure—A Statement That Should be Read by Every Girl in Canada.

Miss Amelia Kelly, a well known and much esteemed young lady living at Maplewood, N. B., writes:—"I consider it my duty to let you know what your wonderful medicine has done for me. In April, 1896, I began to lose flesh and color; my appetite failed and on going up stairs I would be so tired I would have to rest. I continued in this condition for three months when I was taken suddenly ill and not able to go about. Our family doctor was called in and he pronounced my illness chlorosis (poverty of the blood). At first his treatment appeared to do me good, but only for a time, and I then began to grow worse. I continued taking his medicine for three months, when I was so discouraged at not regaining my health that I declined taking it any longer. I then tried a liquid medicine advertised to cure cases like mine, but did not obtain the slightest benefit. I had become terribly emaciated and weak. There was a constant terrible roaring noise in my head; my feet and ankles were swollen and I was as pale as a corpse. One day while in this condition my father brought home a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and asked me to try them. In less than a week I could sit up, and in a couple of weeks I could walk quite a distance without being tired. My appetite returned, the roaring in my head ceased. I began to gain flesh and color, and before I had used a half dozen boxes I was as healthy as I ever had been in my life. My friends did not expect me to recover and are now rejoicing at the wonderful change Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have wrought in me. If my statement will be the means of helping some other discouraged sufferer you are at perfect liberty to publish it."

The above statement was sworn before me at Maplewood, York County, N. B., this 14th day of May 1897.

TIMOTHY A. SMITH, J. P.

Mrs. Colin Campbell, who lives near Fort Stewart, says:—"I suffered very much from kidney trouble, which caused a severe pain in my back, making it very difficult for me to go about or attend to my household duties. I had read so much of the virtues of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that I decided to give them a trial, and by the time I had used three boxes I found the pain had disappeared. I can recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to anyone who is similarly afflicted."

KIDNEY TROUBLE.

Symptoms:

Irritability of the bladder; frequent desire to urinate; scalding sensations; pain in the region of the kidneys; appetite variable; spirits depressed; sediment in the urine.

These indicate Kidney Trouble, which is speedily cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Mr. Starr's Proposal Discussed Last Evening

At a Meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council—Proposition to be Submitted to the Council on Monday—Other Business Transacted

A meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council was held last night, when there were present His Worship Mayor Davis and Councillors Mc-Williams, Dawson, Cobb, Allen, Langford, J. M. White, Hamilton and T. H.
G. Denna.

FINANCIAL.

A number of accounts referred to the Finance Committee were dealt with.

In reference to the request of the Horticultural Society for a grant towards the Victoria Park, it was decided to vote $350 and to expend $50 on the Dixon Park.

The matter of indemnifying Henry Owens in consideration of his removing the Whyte dam, was referred to the Property Committee to report fully thereon.

The insurance on the fire apparatus was ordered to be cancelled.

MARKET TOLLS.

A number of changes having been made by the Legislature as to the amount of tolls which the town can levy on articles offered for sale on the market, a by-law was approved which amended the old by-law. The new regulations are aimed at those outside manufacturers who come on the market with bargains, cutters and other articles and sell them at a price which hurts the business of the ratepayers of the town. It was also decided to appoint the members of the police force as market inspectors, and they were authorized to see that the weight of all articles offered for sale on the market was up to standard.
It was also the opinion of the committee that all articles of food offered for sale should be weighed on the town scales and this weight ticket placed thereon. The tariff of fees which the clerk may charge for weighing was also made.

STREET RAILWAY DEAL.

The proposal of Mr. Starr, representing a syndicate of capitalists who desired certain concessions from the town in return for their building and operating a street railway connecting Lakefield, Chemung and other places with the town, was next dealt with.

Mayor Davis explained the feelings of the council as to the town incurring a liability of $150,000. The town wanted to know what security it would have for the guarantee, and also who were at the back of the company. His Worship read a letter from the Mayor of Cornwall giving Mr. Starr great praise in his capacity as manager of the street railway in that town and also as a man of sterling character.

Mr. Starr explained to the council that he had made arrangements with the G.T.R. whereby his company would take over and operate the Lakefield and Chemung branches, and in event of his company stopping running either of these branches the G.T.R. would step in and continue the operating of the road, handing over to the company the rolling stock and fixtures.

Mr. Dennistoun explained that the company asked the town to guarantee $7,500 a year for twenty years, or half the interest, which would be required to pay the bondholders. It therefore did not require to come under the head of a debenture debt, as at the end of twenty years the face of the debt would not have to be met by the town.

Mr. Edwards, town solicitor, agreed with Mr. Dennistoun as to his contention, but he held that it was practically a debenture debt, as the town was liable for $150,000, or $7,500 for twenty years.

Mr. Starr said that it was reasonable to suppose that his company would not go on with the building of the road unless they were confident that it was going to pay. The only reason that the town were asked for anything at all was to show that the people of the town took interest in it.

Mr. Dennistoun stated that the building of the road would necessitate the erection of a power plant on one of the water powers near by.
Would not that be a valuable asset for the town to have? It would do for street lighting and power purposes.
It was proposed to either take over the present street railway or get a franchise and build four miles of railway in town and to install a full system of cars and motors and would be capable of handling the regular freight business of a railway.

Mayor Davis: "What position would the town be in with reference to the bondholders?"

Mr. Dennistoun said that the worst position the town would be in was this: If, after a certain number of years the company threw up the road the town would take hold of and operate the road, and try and make part of their $7,500 yearly interest or else go on paying $7,500 every year until the twenty years were completed. The citizens were greatly interested in the scheme, and the speaker handed a petition to the council from a host of ratepayers requesting that the matter be submitted to the people.

Mayor Davis thought that the road could be completed for less than $350, 000.

Mr. Starr said that if so, the council had only to guarantee the interest at 5 per cent. on half of what was spent. The town did not assume any liability for the face of the bond. The city of St. Thomas had made such an agreement with their street railway company and had its agreement ratified by the recent Le-gisature.

Councillor Dawson would oppose the agreement because the council had already had experience in giving a bonus.

Councillor McWilliams asked if Mr.
Starr would be satisfied to expend $300,000, and the town guarantee the interest on $100,000 of it.

Mr. Starr: "I do not think so."
Councillor Langford asked Mr.
Starr what agreement he had made with the G.T.R.

Mr. Starr: "I agree to pay them $5,000 per year for the first five years, $8,000 per year for the second five years, and $7,000 per year after for the two roads. It would cost $60,-

Stomach Trouble

Stomach trouble is the common name applied to a derangement of the system which is keenly felt but vaguely understood. It may mean inability to retain food or to digest
it. It may mean nausea, pain after eating, fullness, inordinate craving for food, or entire lack of appetite.

Whatever it means, there's trouble, and it's with the stomach. If you have stomach trouble, you will be interested in this letter from a man who had it and was cured by

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For nine years I suffered from stomach trouble. I tried the aid of the best doctors of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, and spent large sums of money, all in vain. One day while waiting a train in Bellaire, O., I picked up a paper with a notice of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I got one bottle to try it. It did me so much good that I purchased five more bottles. I took four of them and gained in flesh, my appetite improved, and now I can eat anything. My stomach is all

000 to transform the two roads into such condition that electric cars could be run over it satisfactorily."
Mayor Davis did not think a $150,- 000 by-law would carry. He was interested in town to the extent of $600,000, and he did not feel like guaranteeing dollar for dollar.

Councillor McWilliams was confident that the road would be a success, but he thought if the town guaranteed $1 for every $2 the company expended, the total liability not to exceed $100,000, would meet with more favor from the people.

Mr. Starr was quite satisfied if the council could not accept the proposition for them to make the best proposition they could. He would then let the town know, one way or the other, what he would do with it. He thought Mr. McWilliams' suggestion might be considered.

Councillor McWilliams' proposition which met with the approval of the committee, was as follows: That the town guarantee the interest for 10 years on one-third of the actual cost of the road to be $100,000. The town to have a representation on the board.
This suggestion will be made to the council on Monday evening, when the by-law will be drawn up for submission to the people.

The committee then adjourned.

AGRICULTURE PORTFOLIO

Should Fall to East Peterboro's Member, Says Mr. Blezard

Interview by a Times Representative No Truth in Saturday's Rumor that Mr. Dryden Hopes to Sit for East Peterboro—A Candid Statement—Mr. Blezard May Get Cabinet Honors—The Political Situation

The statement published in the Morning Times that rumor was associating the name of Mr. John Dryden with East Peterborough was the topic of conversation in town on Saturday, and the pros and cons of the question were eagerly discussed. With a view to placing before the public, a Times representative called upon Mr. Blezard in the morning.

Mr. Blezard courteously received our representative, who took the opportunity of congratulating him upon his reelection on Tuesday last.

The member for East Peterborough, in thanking him, admitted that he felt delighted at the result. With the exception of Mr. Hardy, he said, he was the oldest supporter of the Government; and he was naturally proud that his old constituency should have consecutively elected him for six terms.

The Times man explained the main object of his mission, and asked how far the report was correct that it was proposed to offer the East Peterborough riding to the defeated Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Blezard said that there was no doubt that East Peterborough was a thoroughly safe seat; but as for the rumor that it was to be given up, he made no mention of it.

He said, however, that he should not be surprised if he himself were invited to accept Mr. Dryden's portfolio. He did not think there was a better qualified man than himself in the Legislature to undertake the duties of Minister of Agriculture.

He was a practical man in the fullest sense of the word. He wished it to be understood that the present member of East Peterborough was in the field for the Minister of Agriculture's portfolio, and he certainly expected to be offered the position.

As regards the political situation, generally, it is conceded by the Conservatives that the latest calculations place the Liberals in a majority of two. Mr. Blezard, however, has declared for the Government, and West Elgin is also said to belong to the Liberal ranks, as also is East Algonia. The following list may be regarded as authentic:

A despatch on Saturday night says: The condition of affairs politically is not changed.

The Government will make no change until matters have quieted down.

Mr. Blezard will not be the next Minister. His name was suggested by a Dominion member of Parliament, but found no favor in this House of Parliament.

The Liberals at Ottawa do not care to have Ottawa opened in the Dominion House.

No change will be made in the Cabinet just now. If there is no other way out Mr. J. R. Stratton, of Peterborough, and Mr. McKay, of South Oxford, will be called in.

THE UNITED STATES POLICY

ANTAGONISTIC TO CANADIANS IN THE YUKON DISTRICT.

(Special to the Times.)
OTTAWA, March 5.

Now that the United States Senate has passed the Alaska Homestead Bill, which refuses bonding privileges in Alaska and transportation facilities in Wrangell, unless certain concessions be made by Canada in regard to United States fishermen, the Opposition in the House of Commons will likely stop their obstruction to the Canadian Yukon railway bill.

It is claimed that the whole Opposition to the measure is directed from those who would like to see the Klondike pass into the hands of the United States, and the Conservatives in the Dominion Parliament, in the vain hope to further their party's policy, are playing into the hands of the enemies of Canada.

It is just as well that the people should know that the policy of the present Opposition may degenerate into treason.

It will be noticed from the Washington despatch that Senator after Senator spoke of the assurances that they had from Canada that the Government here would accept any kind of indignity against the country that might be imported into the Homestead Bill.

DUPED CANADIANS

PAID MONEY TO A ROGUS ADVERTISING AGENT.

(Special to the Times.)
New York, March 5.—The Tribune publishes the following: Advertisements were published seeking information of the whereabouts of J. M. Henning, an advertising solicitor once in the employ of the Atlantic Cable Directory and Code Company. This company and one or two Canadian banks are anxious to find Mr. Henning, and they sought the aid of the police. Incidentally, it may be mentioned that Mr. Henning, who is well known in the advertising circles in this city, is charged with having taken with him into oblivion $2500 which does not belong to him.

It appears from particulars given to a Tribune reporter by C. W. Parker, the manager of the Atlantic Cable Directory and Code Company, that Mr. Henning was until last September employed to solicit advertising for the company, which issues a directory of registered American cable addresses.

After his discharge nothing more was heard of Henning until the directory came out. Then the company was flooded with complaints from people in Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto, asking why their names had not appeared in the directory, and demanding the return of $25 which they had paid for the insertion.

As a result of enquiries which the company instituted, it was found that Henning, posing as the representative of the Directory and Code Company, had made bogus contracts with advertisers, and had appropriated the money he had received in payment. Warrants have been issued for his apprehension.

NINE WERE DROWNED

Schooner Speedwell Capsizes Off Marquesas

IT WAS A SAD HOME-COMING

A Survivor Gives Details of the Happening

Entire Family of Six, Which had been Taking a Vacation, Among Those Drowned—Some Were Caught Like Rats in a Trap—Struck by a Sudden Squall

(Special to the Times.)
Key West, Fla., March 5.—The schooner Speedwell, Capt. Collier, from Marro, Fla., for Key West, was struck by a squall today while off Marquesas, eighteen miles from here, and capsized. Nine persons were drowned out of thirteen, all told, on board.

Among the victims were three children of Capt. Collier, George, Tom and Wilbur, respectively, four, six and eight years old, and the entire Nicholas family, Bradley Nichols and his wife, their son and the latter's wife and two grand-children. The family was from Bridgeport, Ct.

Those saved are Capt. Collier, Samuel Gals and Jesse Green, deckhands, and R. W. Bates of Myers, Fla., a passenger.

The Nicholas family is said to have been well-to-do. All had been staying for a month or two at a small hotel kept by Capt. Collier at Marro and they were on their way home.

The survivors say the Speedwell, which was a small vessel of about 25 tons was making slow headway this morning against a head wind. About 7 o'clock Capt. Collier was at the wheel and the Nicholas family and the Collier children were in the cabin asleep. Suddenly a squall came howling up abeam. Gales and Green rushed to take in sail. As the jib flapped loose, the squall caught the schooner and blew her over on the port side.

Collier, the deckhands and Mr. Bates were swept into the sea, but caught the rigging just in time to save themselves. The wind, rain and surges drowned the dying cries of the imprisoned Nicholas family and the Collier children.

The men lashed themselves to the rigging. After being there for two hours the vessel was hoisted. Then they got the dingy loose, baled her out with a hat, broke a thwart in two pieces and with these for oars rowed toward Marquesas. After going three miles they were picked up exhausted by a fishing sloop and brought here about this afternoon.

Samuel Gals, one of the survivors, who was seen at his home here this evening, said: "Capt. Collier has been sailing now for 25 years in these waters. He is not to blame for this awful thing. The squall came up like nothing I have ever seen and I saw her hand at me, and that's the last I saw of her. When we got off, two hours later, they were all dead."

"Old Mr. Nicholas was the only one to get out of the cabin. I guess he was washed out; for after young Mrs. Nicholas waved her hand at me, I saw her hand at me, and that's the last I saw of her. When we got off, two hours later, they were all dead."

"We did not see a thing of the children or hear a cry. We had to bawl with the hat all the time we were in the dingy and often came near to being swamped."

Soon after being brought in port, Capt. Collier and Jesse Green went out on the yacht Buccanear, accompanied by a driver, to try to recover the bodies.

TROOPS FOR SOKOTO

ROYAL NIGER CO'S MEN PREPARE TO DRIVE OUT THE FRENCH FROM BRITISH TERRITORIES.

(Special to the Times.)
BRASS, West Coast of Africa, March 5.—The Royal Niger Company's forces left Lokoko yesterday for Sokoto, to assist the Sultan of Sokoto to drive the French out of his territory, should the French forces refuse to recross the Niger River.

Major Lugard, the commander-in-chief of the Royal Niger Company's forces, accompanied by other officers, sailed to-day from Liverpool for Rio de Forcados, Upper Guinea.

A PRUSSIAN HORROR

TWENTY BODIES RECOVERED AND MORE IN A BURNING MINE.

Breslau, Prussia, March 5.—A fire started in the Sturn and Seznowitz mine here to-day. Twenty dead bodies have so far been recovered. There are more below in the burning mine.

TEN FISHERMEN DROWNED

WRECKED IN A HEAVY STORM IN PRUSSIA.

Koenigsberg, Prussia, March 5.—A despatch from Memel announces that four fishing vessels belonging to that place were wrecked in a storm yesterday evening. Ten fishermen were drowned and six others are missing.

AMERICA AND SPAIN

NINE MILLIONS FOR A MAN-OF-WAR.

(Special to the Times.)
Washington, March 5.—Senator Hale has received from Secretary Long a reply to a letter recently sent by him to chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs requesting the Secretary's opinion upon the resolution introduced on Washington's birthday by Senator Morgan instructing the committee to ascertain the feasibility of constructing and equipping within a year's time a warship to be called the "George Washington" and to be the "equal at least of any in the world." The cost of such a ship constructed in from one year to eighteen months' time is estimated at from $5,000,000 to $9,000,000.

Madrid, March 5.—Commenting on the rumors of President McKinley's project to purchase Cuba, El Nacional exclaims: "Will nobody preach and proclaim of annexation of Cuba to the United States by agreement with Spain on condition that the United States redeem us from the insular debt, favoring us during a certain period by a tariff concession, and guaranteeing under a powerful authority and a respected flag the lives and property of Spaniards resident in Cuba? Behold a solution of the problem which would win popular sympathy, procuring the best termination of any foreseen or present heartburnings of the nation." The article has provoked much comment.

Purchase of Men-o-War
New York, March 5.—A special to the Herald from Washington says: "Fully realizing the importance of preparations for an emergency, the President has directed the Naval department to open negotiations looking to the purchase of a number of warships. This fact is now for the first time made public. It probably would not have transpired at this juncture but for the excitement caused by the statement published that Spain had purchased or was negotiating for warships being built by the Elswick Company of England, for Brazil, and for other ships under construction."

HIS ACCOUNT SHORT
INLAND REVENUE OFFICER AT WOODSTOCK MISSING FOR SOME TIME.

(Special to the Times.)
Woodstock, Ont., March 5.—George J. Fraser, who for years has been in the tax collector's employ, and Inland Revenue officer in Woodstock, left town last week. Henry N. Orr, of Listowel, is now in charge of the local office, having been appointed immediately after Mr. Fraser's departure. As far as can be learned, no trace of his office's whereabouts has been found, and his prolonged absence is causing considerable concern among his friends.

Mr. Fraser's departure was, according to the statement of the officials of the department, to avoid facing the inspector in an examination of his books.

AWAY BEHIND.
It has since been learned that an official inspection of his accounts showed discrepancies of from five to six hundred dollars. This amount is secured to this Government through his bondsmen, D. Richards, soap manufacturer, and John Morrison, town clerk.

The facts of the case, as gathered from District Collector John Spence, of Brantford, and his associates indicate that the department was informed of some little time previous to Mr. Fraser's departure that the books in the Woodstock office were not kept as regular as they might be. When the matter was brought to the attention of the district collector he communicated with James Gow, of Windsor, inspector for this district.

FRASER'S DISAPPEARANCE.
The two officials met in Woodstock last week. On Wednesday they had an interview with Mr. Fraser, and an inspection of the books was arranged for the following day. In the meantime Mr. Fraser disappeared, and as far as can be learned by his friends since.

The officer enjoyed the confidence of a large number of friends in Woodstock, and many of them will be losers unless he returns and settles up his accounts. It is said that, aside from the shortage in the Government's accounts his liabilities in town amount to considerably over $1,000. It is known positively, however, that Mr. Fraser took no money with him, and the universal regret heard expressed is that he should not have remained in town to straighten out his affairs.

Mr. Fraser was one of the leading public men in Woodstock, and much sympathy is expressed for his family.

Madrid, March 5.—The police here have arrested an Italian who a month ago rushed up to the carriage of Senor Sagasta, the Premier, and threatened him with a stick.

The man was shadowed by the police and has just been found prowling around Senor Sagasta's house. Inquiries are being made concerning him. The prisoner shows signs of insanity.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 7, 1898

A COALITION GOVERNMENT

It is manifest to all practical-minded men that there are only two ways of removing the present political deadlock resulting from the closeness of the fight between the rival forces of Mr. Hardy and Mr. Whitney. Either there must be another appeal to the electorate for a more definite expression of opinion as to whether or not the Liberal Government is to continue in office, or a fusion of parties should be effected—in other words, a coalition government formed. In these days of hot party strife, when a man of one political line is to a person of the opposite shade a rogar and everything else that is bad, it is somewhat difficult to induce a calm reflection upon any matter touching their political existence; and the suggestion made by the Hamilton Herald, an independent newspaper, that the formation of a coalition government made up of the leading men in both the present parties would be the easiest way out of the difficulty confronting us, has already been pock-pocked by the leading Grit journals. It is urged against the proposal that such a move would be a tremendous mistake for both parties and a grave danger to the country, the coalition government of British Columbia being held up as an awful example.

Now the contention that the B. C. Administration is the most corrupt that ever held power in Canada may or may not be true. If it be true, then we wonder at it. One would have imagined that from the very constitution of a coalition government the interests of all classes (or parties) would be safeguarded, and that public offices would not fall into the hands of members of one political party only. But there is another side to the question. Is it not reasonable to suppose that the legislative products of a coalition government would be more useful because less extreme than legislation framed and passed by either Grits or Tories? The world has a notable example in the case of the present British Government, which is made up of Conservatives and moderate Liberals. Of course Lord Salisbury's Cabinet is not a coalition one in the sense that all political parties have coalesced to form the Government; but there is within it a large number of Liberals who retain their Liberal principles and so leave the Conservative loaf that the British House of Commons is enabled to effect legislation which, under other circumstances, would take many years longer to accomplish owing to party lines of demarcation.

Why, then, should not coalition be given a trial in Ontario? The Toronto Star says the public interest will be best served by having the Liberals or the Conservatives at the helm, for "then the party in power must steer a straight course or be wrecked." In other words, the Star recognizes no utility in pursuing an intermediate course, but favors extremes. For our own part, we do not believe that the system of party government is an unmixed blessing, and hope the time will come when moderation will be practicable in all things—even in politics.

Has the general election made you rich?

The Patron candidates lacked patronage.

The Spanish-American war scare has petered out.

It is an understood thing that whichever side wins, the barr' did it.

If you see it in the Times it's so. If you don't see it in this G. J. it isn't so.

Arguments may carry weight, but they are not so heavy as a light dollar bill consideration.

It is a long lane which has no turning. Mr. Whitney may be can see the bend in the road.

Powell defeated O'Keefe in Ottawa by a neck. No doubt the Grit man wishes that neck were broken.

Politics lack principle, so the defeated say. The principal may be wanting, but the interest isn't.

General election week is over. Business can now be proceeded with, and the world may "go marching on."

Blessed is the man who expecteth not a Government office until he gets it, for he will not be disappointed.

Ananias would readily admit that he and Sapphira could never have given pointers in the gentle art to the Yankee yellow journals.

A member of the Dominion Parliament has been confusing Pontius Pilate with Judas Iscariot. Another illustration of the truth saying that "A little knowledge is a dangerous thing."

When will Hardy recover his equilibrium after that "swing of victory"? It's giddy work having anything to do with swings, for they are all alike—they move backwards as well as forwards.

"We have left undone these things which we ought to have done, and we have done those things which we ought not to have done." Many a repentant politician made this confession in the English churches yesterday.

Great talkers are apt to become intoxicated with the exuberance of their own verbosity—others can do the trick on Rock beer. A flow of eloquence in the latter form does not have so dry an effect upon the patients.

At election times many men vote according to the inspiration they receive. If we are to believe the defeated side, that inspiration can scarcely be said to come from above. It usually comes from the depths of someone's trousers pockets.

Peterborough is an important locality. The members for the east and west ridings are both candidates for cabinet portfolios, and one of them at least (Mr. J. R. Stratton) is considered to stand a good chance. Here's to the pair of them.

Mr. O'Keefe ought to be just about mad. Two of his friends who were working in Peterborough had votes in Ottawa and Peterborough, and he told them to vote where they thought best. What happened? Stratton got in by 1,000 and O'Keefe was left out by 2. Quite a bad, wasn't it?

The modesty of the Press is most becoming. Blooming? It has come, and has been with us right along. This great family journal, The Morning Times, has until now omitted to put itself on the back and to offer itself congratulations upon having saved the country during a great crisis. We now hasten to apologize to ourselves, and promise that next time we will promptly give credit when and where it is due.

FROM ALASKA TO MEXICO

TURN IN THE TIDE OF EXPLORATION FOR GOLD—IN THE SOUTHERN ELDOorado.

The Secretary of State has received a report from United States Consul Kendrick, at Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, in regard to the gold discoveries in the Yaqui country, from which it appears that seekers after the yellow metal disdained by the rigors and hardships of an Alaskan winter, are directing considerable attention to the southern Eldorado.

"For the last month," says the consul, "as many as 20 prospectors each week have fitted out at El Paso, Tex., and departed over the Rio Grande, Sierra Madre and Pacific road for the Yaqui territory. Reports coming back from them have been generally favorable. A few days ago a rich vein was struck near Guaymas, which runs 8,000 ounces of silver and 11 ounces of gold to the ton. But, however rich the deposits may be, I would not recommend that anyone seek his fortune there with a mere pan and pick. There is, without doubt, considerable gold there; but to be worked profitably plenty of capital and the most improved machinery are requisite.

"The Yaqui gold country is reached by taking the Rio Grande, Sierra Madre and Pacific road at Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, for Casas Grandes, 150 miles to the southwest.

"After winding among the defiles of the mountains, the prospector will enter the valley of the Yaqui River. Many extravagant stories have been told of the existence of placer and quartz gold in this valley. The Yaqui Indians have extracted gold in meagre quantities. Until recently the admission of miners to this territory was denied by the Indians, and this probably caused the exaggerated reports about the deposits of the precious metal. 'Until lately the Indians rebelled against certain laws of the Mexican Government; but now a treaty with them is in effect, and they are peaceable. For many years the Indians have sold gold to the traders, but it has been impossible to determine how rich the deposits are. As I stated above, it will require plenty of capital to mine it profitably.

"It is a virgin country from Casas Grandes to the gold fields. Plenty of deer, bear and turkey can be found to supply the traveller with fresh meat. Springs and small streams of fresh water are numerous. As far as Chuachup, corn, flour, potatoes and other necessities can be bought from settlers.

"Prospecting in the Yaqui country is relatively cheap. Everything purchased is paid for in Mexican money. The climate is healthy and work can be prosecuted for 365 days in the year. The mining laws of the republic of Mexico insure the prospector full protection and enjoyment of anything valuable he may find."

ANOTHER DEFAULTER

YOUNG MAN ARRESTED A FEW DAYS AFTER HIS MARRIAGE.

(Special to the Times)
Sherbrooke, Que., March 5.—Henri Alivier, a prominent young man of this city, for many years the confidential clerk of Walter Blue & Co., the large clothing manufacturers, is under arrest here charged with appropriating his employers' funds. Alivier has always been a high liver, but by his attention to business succeeded in gaining the suspicions of the firm. About three weeks he left Walter Blue & Co's employ to start in business here. A few days later he married a well known and respected young lady of this city. The rich and numerous gifts with which he presented his wife forced open the eyes of his late employers. Careful and thorough examination of his books was entered into, and a deficit of more than four thousand dollars was ascertained. Alivier was apprehended on returning here from his wedding tour, and later allowed out on bail. It is stated that Alivier's defalcations will reach a much higher figure than the one stated. Alivier is now in Three Rivers in the custody of the plaintiff's lawyer, where he is trying to raise the amount necessary to cover his deficit.

GOLD IN QUEBEC

DEPOSITS FOUND IN THE MEGANTIC REGIONS.

(Special to the Times)
Inverness, Que., March 5.—Considerable excitement has been caused in the County of Megantic by the discovery of gold on the banks of the Beland Brook. The discovery was made late in the autumn, and in consequence of the ground being frozen and the unusual depth of snow there has not been much prospecting. Notwithstanding these drawbacks, several pits have been sunk, and in every case gold in small quantities has been found in the black sand that seems to be scattered over the whole of the flats, which compose the banks of the stream. Several capitalists have visited the locality, and some good offers have been made for the property on which the discovery was made, but the proprietor does not seem to be disposed to share his good fortune with others. Experts are now digging to see if there is anything that has been discovered in the Dominion, other than the Klondike.

HARRY ABBOTT'S DEATH

SON OF THE LATE SIR JOHN ABBOTT, FORMER PREMIER OF CANADA.

(Special to the Times)
Montreal, March 5.—A telegram was received here this morning announcing the death of Mr. Harry Abbott, Q. C., of the law firm of Abbott, Campbell & Meredith, of this city. He was a son of Sir John Joseph Caldwell Abbott, formerly Premier of Canada. His mother, Lady Abbott, only died a week ago yesterday. Mr. Abbott has been married less than a year, and was 41 years of age.

THREE DEGREES OF BURNS

METHODS OF TREATMENT TO FOLLOW UNTIL THE PHYSICIAN COMES.

A burn may result from excessive heat applied in any way—hot air or hot water, steam, flame or electricity—or even from extreme cold. The injury resulting from contact with hot hot water or steam is usually called a scald, but is practically the same in its results as a burn.

Surgeons speak of different degrees of a burn, according to the amount of tissue destroyed by it. Thus, a burn of the first degree is one that simply reddens and irritates the skin; a burn of the second degree is one that causes inflammation of the skin with the formation of blisters; while a burn of the third degree destroys the skin and more or less of the flesh beneath it, or even chars and kills all the tissues, including the bone itself.

The effect of the burn depends partly upon its degree, but not entirely for a burn even of the first degree may cause death if it involves a very large portion of the surface of the body. This it does by interfering with the necessary excretion of waste matter which is constantly taking place through the skin.

A curious effect of a severe burn in any part of the body is ulceration of the bowels following very intense congestion of the entire digestive canal. The bronchial tubes and the lungs are sometimes injured by the inhalation of steam or very hot air, but even apart from such an accident, a person who has been burned about the chest or back is very liable to have an attack of bronchitis or pneumonia in consequence.

The first thing to be done in the case of a burn of any degree is to stop the pain. This should be done, not only from the natural impulses to relieve suffering, but because the shock resulting from the injury may be so greatly increased by the agony as to cause the death of the patient, even when the burns in themselves would not do so.

Covering the part with any bland substance, such as olive oil, vaseline, sweet butter, or flour paste, to keep off the air will often afford great relief, and in burns of the first degree nothing more may be needed. Cotton-wool the name given to a mixture of equal quantities of linseed-oil and lime-water was formerly, and is still in many work shops, the favorite application for a burn. Better still is bicarbonate of soda—cooking soda—or calined magnesia, made into an ointment with vaseline or lard, or dusted thickly over the skin.

Another application which is often exceedingly grateful is a solution of nitrate of potash, nitrate of silver, or a paste of gunpowder for this purpose. One or other of these applications will usually suffice in mild cases, and in severe burns will help to reduce the pain for the time until the doctor comes.

STARVED TO INSANITY

STRANGE HALLUCINATION OF A CHICAGO COUPLE—BOTH MAY DIE.

(Special to the Times)
CHICAGO, March 5.—J. A. Rerup and his wife insane beyond cure, and in the last stages of starvation, were found yesterday morning by Sergt. Charles Hefter of police headquarters barricaded behind the doors of their home, 3709 LaSalle street, with the hallucination that enemies were seeking to enter the house and kill them. For two months the two have existed in the almost unfurnished rooms with little food, and their condition yesterday told a tale of terrible privation. Both were wan, and the woman's eyes were sunk in her head until she could scarcely be seen in the hollows. She was too weak to talk, and the story was told to the policeman by the husband, once a brawny, muscular fellow, but now a bent and withered wreck. Each is about 35 years old. The attention of the police was called to Rerup and his wife by a letter written in German by a neighbor, who said that during the two months the couple had been living on the second floor of the building no one had seen them move outside the door, and the only evidence that there was life in the rooms was the occasional flicker of a lamp late in the night.

ANOTHER FRENCH DUEL

SEQUEL TO THE RECENT TRIAL OF ZOLA, THE NOVELIST.

Paris, March 5.—Colonel Piquart, who was disciplined for giving testimony favorable to the case of M. Zola, at the recent trial of the author, fought a duel with swords today in the riding hall of the military school with Colonel Henry, who testified against M. Zola. The latter was wounded in the wrist and arm. Colonel Henry succeeded Colonel Piquart as chief of the Secret Service of the War Office.

THE TRUST FACE.

Observe the Trust Face, says The New York Journal. Before you is a composite picture of seven men who are not only among the richest in America, but who control the price of seven of the necessities of civilized life.

The names of these men and the commodities they control are:

HENRY O. HAVEMAYER Sugar
JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER Oil
PHILIP D. ARNDT Beef
J. PIERPONT MORGAN Coal
ANDREW CARNEGIE Steel
JOHN ARBUCKLE Coffee
CHARLES R. PLINT Rubber

When you look at this composite picture you see the face of the most successful man who could exist, according to the standard of rich men.

THE TRUST FACE.

The basis of the photograph is Henry O. Havemayer, the "Sugar King." He is chosen because he has the most typical face of the group.

The richest man in the composite picture is John D. Rockefeller, but he does not have a great effect on it. His features lack strength, although they have a curious similarity. He is tall, thin, round shouldered, wears a mustache only, and has a dull and careworn look. It has been said that he looks more like a country clergyman than a millionaire. The reason of his success is hard to gather from his face. The most reasonable answer seems to be that there is genius behind it.

Mr. Rockefeller is by many believed to be the richest man in the world. His fortune has been conservatively estimated at $200,000,000. Of that only a small part, perhaps a fourth, consists of stock in the Standard Oil Company, but as he is the leading spirit of that organization, his power of influencing capital is almost unlimited.

Philip D. Armour of Chicago has the strongest and most attractive face of the lot. He supplies beef to about three-quarters of the people of the United States and to a large part of those of Europe. Fifty or sixty thousand people receive direct supply from his meat packing establishment alone.

J. Pierpont Morgan, generally recognized as the ablest financier on Wall street, has found time among his multitudinous occupations to organize a combination which profitably controls the supply of anthracite coal from Pennsylvania.

Andrew Carnegie, of Pittsburg, controls the prices of steel rails throughout the world.

To John Arbuckle, of the Coffee Trust, the composite picture is indebted for flowing whiskers.

Charles R. Plint, of the Rubber Trust, is remarkable for very fierce, black side whiskers.

A PLACE FOR URNS.

A Classic Temple For the Ashes of the Dead.

Cremation evidently has not overlooked the love of the beautiful in man in its endeavor to provide for the disposal of the dead. The new Odd-fellows columbarium at San Francisco is a demonstration of this fact, as the picture and description from The Call of that city, shows. The Call says: The structure was original and unique in design and cost about $15,000. The ground plan of the columbarium shows a circular building, carrying the outer dome intersected at the four cardinal points by rectangular wings. Between these four wings are four quadrants formed by outer walls, concentric with the inner wall, but running up only as high as two stories. Inside of the main circular wall is a series of eight piers, carrying with them two galleries, or arcades on their outer periphery, and playing on the inner circumference a spacious rotunda. In this way the building becomes divided into well-defined portions—central rotunda, main galleries, wings and quadrants.

Standing on the mosaic floor under the mellowing light of the great stained glass window in the dome overhead, no one will be conscious of the vast number of niches in the galleries and wings around him to be at some time stored with the ashes of thousands of the dead. This impression is much enhanced by the use of heroic marble. On the gallery parapets stationary urns are set, forming a part of the architectural scheme of the rotunda. These are of alabaster and bronze, while the mortuary tablets below are of white Italian marble. The main stairway is of marble and bronze and the entire floor of colored marble mosaic.

The niches are of cement, varying in size, and ranging along the brick wall, one above another, in not more than five rows. The niches are framed in light bronze with doors in front, left open or covered with marble plaques to suit the taste of the purchaser. It will be possible to buy groups of niches of number required and have them covered with one comprehensive plaque, on which may be engraved any name or inscription the owner chooses. There will be great variety in the size and position of niches and space has been reserved on the exterior of the building, in the front pilasters, in the niches, and in the columns of the rotunda. These spaces will be disposed of at higher rates, according to location and prominence.

The whole exterior of the building is clad in artificial stone of the light cream granite. The design is taken from the character and color in feeling and motive to the architecture.

BIRTH ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Some of the Various Ways in Which Newspapers Print Them.

Of all the things that appear in the regular and ordinary "make-up" of a newspaper, birth notices are perhaps the most amusing. They find their way into both metropolitan and country newspapers. The latter especially seem to love them. The crossroads correspondent seems such a curious important item, hence their frequent appearance in The Pine Hill Epistle. Some papers have particular columns or spaces devoted to birth, marriage and obituary news. Others record the same events under the titles "Cradle," "Altar" and "Tomb," while a third class use three words in the headline, "Yells," "Belts" and "Knells."

The following are a few notices clipped at random from papers all over the United States and Canada, says The Chicago Times-Herald. Some are to the point, while others convey more information than is necessary:

McDonald—May 28, 1896, a daughter to Daniel and Emma L.

Albert Drinkie is a papa.

A little girl baby began its residence with Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Waitely Wednesday of last week.

A little son-beam came to brighten the home of Attorney J. C. Russell and wife on Thursday afternoon of last week.

What causes Charlie Prasaden to smile? Oh, it's a boy.

Tom Arnold reports a lovely little Bryanite at his house since Monday night. The little man is rather wee as yet.

Another new blacksmith came to Waco. For particulars see Albert Kidd.

A little city treasurer made its appearance at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Washbush last Saturday.

On Thursday eve of last week a little girl was left at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Cannon. As it was good looking they concluded to keep it until it was 17.

H. C. Sackett was all smiles on Saturday, and his friends found that good J. D.'s were none to good for them. A girl arrived at his house that day.

Father doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances.

Born, in Lansing, on Sunday last Dec. 6, to Mr. and Mrs. George Robinson, twins—a boy and a girl. We are very glad to see that George has been converted to the theory of the double standard. We would like to suggest as names for these two precocious youngsters Sylvester and Goldie.

There will be another stocking to hang up at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George White in the southwest country this Christmas. It's a boy, and from the report we judge he is a dandy.

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Cox, Sunday night, twin girls. Dr. Dillon was in attendance, and says all are doing nicely. Ed, however, had to be watched closely by his friends for a day or two, but is out of danger now and is perfectly harmless.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reynolds have welcomed to their home a daughter, born Dec. 8.

N. H. Tracy now wears a 9 by 14 smile on his face, all on account of the arrival of a new dishwasher at his house the 16th ult.

Dr. Frank Kmieciak, the Leroy dentist, formerly of this city, takes his happiness in double doses. He is the father of twins.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Dryfus of 64 Washington avenue have already received their Christmas gift. It is a plump, dimpled little girl.

A young voter arrived at the home of Pete Olson recently. Of course, he missed the election, but fortunately McKinley had no need of more votes this time.

J. W. Rogers is entertaining a very young gentleman, who took up a permanent residence with him on last Thursday.

A little gentleman arrived at G. Ericson's last week, apparently quite determined to make that his future home. All concerned are doing well.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. Harding have presented this town with the first McKinley baby. He was born Dec. 5, and will be known as Owen McKinley Harding.

A new toll-gate keeper arrived at Mr. Hardcastle's Thursday night. His name is Wm. Bryan.

W. H. Weland is happy. He hasn't stopped smiling since he was informed yesterday that he had attained the dignity of being grandpa. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Moore being the parents of a 10 1-2-pound baby girl.

Thousands of young men are made nervous wrecks, unfit for business, social pleasures or home duties by evil habits in youth, later excesses, or private diseases. W. D. Andrews, of Akron, O., says: "I read this paper and have seen many reports of remarkable cures made by Drs. Kennedy and Kergan. I decided to treat with them. Indiscretion was the cause of my trouble. I was weak and nervous; no ambition; back weak; pimples on the face; thin and haggard; eyes sunken and cheeks hollow; dreams and drains at night; memory poor; varicose and weak parts; irritable; sinking spells; spoke before the eyes; lack of confidence; no energy; and many other complaints. I had tried fourteen doctors, bought four electric belts took scores of bottles of patent medicines—all failed. I tried the New Treatment of Drs. Kennedy and Kergan, and it cured me. I am a Man Again. I have gained twenty-six pounds and am strong mentally, physically and sexually. It is a wonderful treatment."

BROKE HER NECK

FATAL RESULT OF A FALL DOWN STAIRS IN MONTREAL.Montreal, March 5.—Mrs. A. R. Dugault fell down stairs at her residence, 83 St. Christophe street, last night and broke her neck. Death was almost instantaneous.

MISCELLANEOUS

A man was killed in Chicago by being stabbed through the eye with a bat pin. The police have obtained no clue to the murderer, but, after several days' study, they have reached the sage conclusion that the deed was done by a woman.Gen. Wade Hampton of South Carolina says if there is to be a war with Spain, the North should fight it. Judging by his own experience, Hampton probably thinks that Southerners have danger enough to encounter in handling mules.Kid McCoy now claims the championship of the world. Messrs. Fitzsimons and Corbett are familiar with these tactics. Each tried them in his time. Eventually McCoy will worry Fitzsimons into a fight. Then he may or may not be champion.The alternative is presented to the British Government of crushing out the band of brigands which has been terrorizing Northern Borneo or of evacuating Great Britain never surrendering any territory voluntarily. It, therefore, is to be expected that a force sufficient to end the disturbances will be sent to the island.One of Atlanta's swell bachelors, who lives without neckties, has just won a lawsuit from a poor artist because the latter was so thoughtless as to put a ribbon on the former's neck in a picture. I hope the artist through-ly understands that he narrowly escaped a duel and that he ought to be perfectly willing, in view of this,
to let one the $50 which the swell refused to pay for the portrait with the neck-tie.

Rheumatic People

Do not want white words.
If ailing they want curing at once. I here say "NEW LIFE" will positively cure you of all forms of Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Neuralgia or Gout. "It has never failed." It has been used by scores that "New weight in gold. Send for free

W. E. DUBSON,

12 Jarvis street, Toronto

LIFE NEAR SHAGWAY

MR. DYER SEEMS TO LIKE THE CLIMATE.Charles E. O'H. Dyer of No. 3826 Prospect avenue, Buffalo, has received the following letter from his brother, a Klondiker. It is dated Skagway, February 5th.You will be surprised to hear that I am back in this town once more. We had got as far as our journey as the Hootalinqua 216 miles from here but were forced to stop there on account of the ice which was coming down.
So we landed on the left bank of the Louis or Thirty Mile river, just opposite the mouth of the Hootalinqua, where we built a log cabin and lived in solid comfort like tough mountaineers, as we all are until, getting tired of inactivity, we concluded it would be best to go after more supplies instead of lying in idleness and consuming our present grub, which is worth $1 per pound.So we stored our provisions in the cabin and intend bringing in about 3,000 pounds more of solid food. We will bring this stuff with horses over the ice to the foot of Lake Lebrge, which is 30 miles above where our mansion is located. Our cabin is a daisy, is known for hundreds of miles, and is occupied by us four. Our fire-place is a winner and has gladdened the heart of many a gold seeker from Dawson
City, 20 or 30 of whom pass up daily.
We have left one of the boys in charge of the cabin and contents, while the other two and myself made a bold break for this place. We loaded a sled with tent, stove, provisions and blankets and in good health and high spirits left for Skagway.The weather was just lovely, and we enjoyed the trip immensely. We slept to camp every night at 4 o'clock, and we rarely missed a night sleeping in some finer cabin. I used to imagine that people could not stand the wintry in Alaska unless they were natives of some arctic region, but I have lived to experience with surprise and pleasure the grand winter country of Dawson City and surrounding country. The thermometer stood at 52 degrees below zero for ten days while we were building our castle. You will hardly credit that we did not experience any discomfort during that time or since until we arrived here. One of the boys has gone to Portland for horses and supplies, so I will be here until he returns, which will be in about three weeks. Then we will pack our stuff down on the foot of Lebrge and store it until the ice is out of the lake and rivers.This is about thirty miles from where our cabin stands on the Louis river, and when the time comes for us to continue our journey, we will take our boat up there. We have been doing prospecting on the Hootalinqua, but have not made any rich finds yet. We could not get to bed-rock on account of the water coming in on us.
We got down 27 feet, but had to throw up the sponge, as everyone else that tried the layout has done. Though there are great reports of the gold to be found on Hootalinqua, my opinion is that the game is not worth the candle, so we will make our fitting farewell up when the right time comes.
We built a boat on Lake Lindeman.
We had to saw the lumber ourselves, but it is all right, for it has done credit to the builders and has passed through two horrible ordeals scratch-less. It was reserved for me to shoot the awful Canyon Dan all alone. It is a furious boiling torrent of wild eddies and foam topped waves over a mile through and though it seemed like eternity to me (I presume it was little short of it), I was but one minute making the dash. How was that for going. Your race horses would not be in it with me.But when we came to White Horse Rapid, Canyon Dan appeared in the purling stream to it. It is something fearful, but my Irish blood was up and we took all our stuff out of the boat and returned loose and put her through empty, and we came off with colors flying. We then packed our stuff around about a mile and continued our journey until we arrived where you find us. We had a very lucky and pleasant trip the whole way, and did not encounter one storm on the lakes.
When storms come up on these waters they are perfectly frightful, but I am happy to say we are over the dangerous waters now. You will not be likely to hear of me for some time, for ere this reaches you I shall have pulled out for the Mercer of the North, the land of nuggets and ice eternal.

E. B. DYER.

ETIQUETTE OF WEDDINGS

The rules of etiquette which underlie the formal and informal wedding cannot be said to apply equally to both. Under no circumstances does the groom pay for the wedding invitations.
All the expenses of the wedding should be met by the father of the bride. The groom pays the clergyman's fees, and in addition to his gift to the bride, he may present the bridesmaids, ushers and best man with a souvenir if he so wishes, these are his only expenses.The invitations to a wedding ceremony should be sent out two weeks before the wedding.
Announcements should be sent to the friends who were not invited to the ceremony. They should be issued immediately after the wedding. The announcement card reads: Mr. and Mrs. Wharton Elkins announce the marriage of their daughter, Annabel,Free Medical AdviceYou need a doctor many times when you don't call one. You suffer pain in fifty forms and yet won't call the doctor, because you hope that the pain "will go away after a while." And, too, you know by experience, that that first visit of the doctor is generally followed by many others, with the inevitable consequence of a big bill "for professional services." You don't know what to do for yourself or what to take.
But suppose that you could get free, absolutely free, the advice of one of the mostEminent Physiciansin the United States? You can. The physician is right here. He has an office in the building, he has a staff of correspondents to assist him, and anyone and everyone who needs medical advice is invited to write to him. If it's baby's health or mother's or the health of any member of the family you may write about it, sure of a careful reading of your letter, sure of a conscientious diagnosis of your case.

Sure of a Cure

If cure is possible. Every letter will be held as a strictly confidential communication.Remember these facts:
We offer you medical advice from one of the most eminent practitioners in the United States, whether our medicines suit your particular case or not. We offer you this advice at the cost of the two cent stamp which it will take to bring your letter to our office. Address: The Medical Department,
Dr. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.to Mr. Albert Forest, on December 20, 1897, at Albemarle, Canada.If the wedding is to be held in church and the friends invited to a reception or a wedding breakfast, a small card announcing this fact is enclosed with the invitation to a wedding breakfast.
The invitation to a wedding breakfast must be acknowledged immediately, and the acknowledgment sent to the mother and father of the bride, or to whoever invites you to the breakfast.If it is a home wedding, the bridesmaids are generally omitted. The clergyman stands at one end of the room facing the guests. The bride enters the room on the arm of her father, or whoever is to give her away. She is met by the groom and his best man when she has reached the clergyman.
The father of the bride and the best man step aside and the bride and groom face the clergyman. After the ceremony has been performed they turn around and receive the congratulations of their friends. An hour or two is the accustomed time that a bride should give to her friends before leaving the room to don her traveling costume.The refreshment for a quiet home wedding may vary from a punch and fancy cake to an elaborate menu of iced meats, oysters, salad, game fancy ice and wine.The bride cuts the wedding cake at a wedding breakfast. Whether at a small or large wedding, the guests should find on departing small boxes of wedding cake tied with white ribbons, and each guest if she chooses may take a box with her.When the wedding is held in church, the bride party may be a large one if so desired, consisting of the maid of honor and eight or six bridesmaids and ushers and the best man. The bride is always driven to the church with her father. Resting her arm lightly in her father's arm, she walks up the aisle. The maid of honor and the bridesmaids precede her. At the chancel the bride is met by the bridegroom, and together they kneel at the altar.
The best man always accompanies the groom to the church, and at the altar he stands a little back of him at his right hand.Present should be sent to the bride.
They may be sent any time after the invitation to the wedding has been received. At the wedding reception they may be displayed or not, according to the wish of the bride. Every wedding gift should be acknowledged by the bride herself as promptly as possible. It must always be remembered that the bride should be made high in the neck, and with long sleeves.
For a large wedding the most fashionable wedding costume of the season is made of white net over white peau de soie, the net embroidered with orange blossoms in silk and pearls. With such a gown the wedding veil is always worn. The white satin wedding gown is always in good taste. If the bride is to be married in her travelling gown, and in reality it is the costume in which she will start on her honeymoon, then she must be careful not to select a conspicuous costume. A tailor-made gown of handsome material and well made is appropriate for such an occasion.All presents sent to the bride are marked with her maiden name, not her prospective husband's. They are her own property, not her husband's.The greater includes the less.
Hood's Sarsaparilla cures scrofula, and may be depended upon to cure boils and pimples.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Councillor McWilliams moved the adoption of the following report:
To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:

to a vote of the qualified ratepayers which shall provide that the town will guarantee the interest on debentures or bonds of the company represented by Mr. D. A. Starr, provided the company carry out the electric railway and other projects outlined by Mr. Starr, for ten years at 5 per cent. per annum, to an amount equal to one-third of the cost and not to exceed in any event $100,000, and the town to have a representative on the board of the company.

Peterborough, Mar. 7.
To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:

Gentlemen,—Your Committee of the Whole Council beg leave to report and recommend as follows:

That the town will agree, provided its details can be satisfactorily arranged, to guarantee the bonds of the proposed Electric Railway Company to the amount of $50,000 at 4 per cent. per annum, the bonds to be for twenty years, and provided the town is given a security in the form of a first mortgage on the property of the railway, including rails, wires, cars and other plant and rolling stock, within the Town of Peterborough, or other security equally as good.

All of which is respectfully submitted
Chairman

Councillor Best said he would move that this be referred back. He would like to know whether the terms were definitely stated. The terms should be arranged before they adopted the report and assumed responsibility.

Councillor McWilliams did not consider it necessary to go into details until they knew whether the company would accept the proposition. At present they did not know if they would accept a general proposition that the council should take a bond for $50,000 for 20 years.

Councillor Best: Adopting this report will have no effect.

Councillor Hamilton differed.

Councillor Best: We ought not to vote unless the terms are set forth clearly.

Councillor McWilliams pointed out that they did not bind themselves to anything. The matter would come before them again.

Councillor Hamilton: The proposition covers that.

Councillor Best: It covers nothing. Councillor Langford said that if the details were not satisfactory they could reject them. The resolution did not bind them to anything.

Councillor Meldrum thought that after all the discussions they had upon the question it was time to take some action. The money these people intended to spend would give employment to a large number of persons, and so far as possible without risk to the credit of the town they ought to do all they could in order to meet the company and see whether they meant business or not. As he understood the report, it put them in this position: It showed that they were willing to meet the Street Railway Company and assist them as far as possible in carrying out their scheme. If the company refused to accept the proposition, which did not bind the council in any shape or form, then the whole deal was off. They could not spend a dollar or give a bond without the consent of the people, and the proposition was simply proposed to put on record that they meant business. There was not a citizen who was not desirous that an expenditure should be made to give employment to their people, and if the council could do so in a satisfactory manner and security given which they were entitled to, then he thought the town was warranted in going to the extent proposed.

The report was agreed to.

MARKET COMMITTEE.

On the proposition of Councillor Langford, seconded by Councillor Hamilton, the following report was adopted:

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:

Gentlemen,—Your Market Committee beg leave to report that they have had a By-law prepared to amend the Market By-law to comply with the changes made in the law in the Ontario Statute of 1897 and to make other amendments, which will be submitted to you.

All of which is respectfully submitted
WM. J. LANGFORD,
Chairman.

The council subsequently considered proposed amendments to By-laws, and again adjourned.

JOINT COMMITTEE.

Councillor Langford presented the report of the Joint Committee as follows:

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:

Gentlemen,—Your Joint Committee beg leave to report as follows:

Your committee held a meeting with representatives of the County Council at which representatives from Ennisville were also present, in reference to the Mud Lake bridge on Feb. 9th.

At this meeting the following proposition was accepted by the County representatives: That the Town of Peterborough pay this year one-half of the expenditure of keeping up the Mud Lake bridge, the town to be consulted regarding all expenditure, and that the County Engineer procure information as to the cost of a filled-in bridge, the best place for it, etc., and that the county and town send deputations to the question of establishing a house of industry, and recommend that the chairman of this committee and Councillor McWilliams be appointed a committee to represent the town on the deputations to the Governments and in regard to the expenditure in maintaining the bridge this year.

2. Your committee also conferred with the county councillors in regard to the question of establishing a house of industry, and recommend that the chairman of this committee and Councillor McWilliams be appointed a committee to represent the town on the deputations to the Governments and in regard to the expenditure in maintaining the bridge this year.

3. Your committee also conferred with the county councillors in regard to the question of establishing a house of industry, and recommend that the chairman of this committee and Councillor McWilliams be appointed a committee to represent the town on the deputations to the Governments and in regard to the expenditure in maintaining the bridge this year.

Your committee also conferred with the county councillors in regard to the question of establishing a house of industry, and recommend that the chairman of this committee and Councillor McWilliams be appointed a committee to represent the town on the deputations to the Governments and in regard to the expenditure in maintaining the bridge this year.

Your committee also conferred with the county councillors in regard to the question of establishing a house of industry, and recommend that the chairman of this committee and Councillor McWilliams be appointed a committee to represent the town on the deputations to the Governments and in regard to the expenditure in maintaining the bridge this year.

9. Your committee also conferred with the county councillors in regard to the question of establishing a house of industry, and recommend that the chairman of this committee and Councillor McWilliams be appointed a committee to represent the town on the deputations to the Governments and in regard to the expenditure in maintaining the bridge this year.

Coun. Langford said that as regard the Mud Lake bridge, it had been thought wise to keep it in repair pending arrangements for the building of a new and permanent bridge. Unless they build these bridges with the idea of getting the farmers in, it would cost much money to keep it in repair.

Coun. Dawson: I should not object if it did not amount to much—not more than twenty dollars.

Coun. McWilliams: No money will be spent without our consent. If there is any great damage to be repaired and a heavy expenditure required, we should let it go.

Coun. Dawson said they were getting into a state of barbarism. It was the greatest piece of what he called rotting outside to build these bridges with the idea of getting the farmers in.

Coun. Denne took it that according to the report they could not spend one dollar without the Council's authority.

Coun. Dawson thought the amount should be limited. He objected to the way in which the report was worded.

Coun. Best said he would move that a clause be added limiting them to an expenditure not exceeding two hundred dollars.

Coun. Denne and Hamilton rose to second the amendment.

Coun. Dawson was inclined to move that the expenditure should not exceed $20.

Coun. McWilliams thought the report was a very safe one for the Council to adopt. He differed altogether from Mr. Dawson with regard to the expenditure could be made; and they wished they had amongst them such men as the late W. A. Scott, who was the originator of the bridges, and then whom there was no more enterprising person. If Mr. Dawson would only spend one week at Mud Lake bridge or any of the other similar bridges he would see the advantage. He thought the matter would be safe in Coun. Langford's hands; but any way, when the report came in as to what was required to be done would be the time to find fault. In regard to the building of a permanent bridge, he thought the Provincial Government, as well as the County Council and Town Council, should give some assistance. The township of Ennisville had offered to give something towards a permanent bridge.

Coun. Best said the township of Ennisville refused to spend a dollar in repairing the bridge, saying that it was the duty of the County Council to do it, but they said that if the county and the town jointly would undertake to construct a permanent bridge they would be willing to tax the town to the extent of $12,000 or even more.

Coun. Meldrum said that a large portion of the grain and produce from this county came into the town continuously during the whole winter over the Ennisville road. He should be very sorry to see it closed up. In consideration of the interest of the people, and the fact that they brought their produce into the town and spent their money here, he thought the Council would be warranted in expending a reasonable sum.

Coun. Dawson said no man wanted Peterborough town to prosper more than he did, and every five-cent piece saved was interest, but he should like to point out that there were about 18 bridges on Little Creek, and none of the farmers would give a cent towards them.

The Mayor suggested that in order to make the report more explicit a clause should be added that no money must be spent without consulting and securing the assent of the Council.

Coun. McWilliams: That is what it means. I can't make anything else out of it.

Coun. Best: Why not get the engineer's report on it.

The Mayor remarked that there was quite a feeling on the part of the County Council that the Council had not treated them as they should, and so the committee did not wish to make this resolution too tight, at the same time providing that no large expenditure should be incurred without the consent of the town.

The resolution was amended as suggested by the Mayor, and was then formally moved by Coun. Langford and seconded by Coun. McWilliams.

Coun. Meldrum said he could only say with regard to Coun. Best's amendment that it was worse than the proposition. The resolution did not call upon them to spend anything, while the amendment authorized them to spend $200, whether necessary or not.

Coun. Best: I want to know the terms of the engineer's report.

Coun. McWilliams: When it comes in that will be the time to find out.

Coun. Best withdrew his amendment, and the proposition as amended was then carried unanimously.

THE MARKET TOLLS.

It was proposed by Coun. Langford, seconded by Coun. W. H. White, and carried: That the Market Committee be authorized to sell by auction the year commencing April 1st next, and to take all the steps necessary for the sale, and to complete the purchase.

PROPOSED IMPROVEMENT OF THE SIDEWALKS.

Coun. Langford proposed: That the Street and Bridge Committee be instructed to lay concrete or brick sidewalks on both sides of George Street, between Brock and Charlotte streets, and also to improve the roadway on the same part of George Street as soon as the weather permit the work to be done. He said the sidewalks there were a disgrace to the town. He thought it would be advisable to do this work out of the general tax; their proportion for walks and streets this year was very little—not as much as they should like it to be; but with an expenditure of $3,000 on George street, they would still have enough to go on.

Coun. Hamilton seconded the proposition.

Coun. Meldrum entirely disagreed with taking it out of this year's assessment. It should be done by a frontage tax (Hear, hear). The general taxpayers should pay their proportion, but the local owners ought also to pay their share.

Coun. Langford: If it was shown to you that George street would be paying more for the walks by a general tax than by a local tax would you vote for it?

Coun. Meldrum: That would depend on another proposition which I should ask you later.

The Mayor: If the proposition is for a frontage tax, then I am with you.

On the proposition of Coun. Langford, seconded by Coun. Denne, the matter was referred to the Street Committee.

SEWERAGE EXPENDITURE.

Coun. Best read an abstract account of the money expended on account of the outfall sewer after the passing of the bill authorizing the construction of the same. He pointed out that the statement showed how the surplus had been expended.

Coun. Langford: It doesn't show any surplus now, I suppose.

Coun. Best: Unfortunately it does not.

Coun. Meldrum: Show the surplus in the same way the Ontario Government do. (Laughter).

Coun. Dawson moved that the Sewerage Committee be instructed to prepare a by-law compelling people to connect their houses with the sewerage where street improvements were effected.

Coun. Hamilton seconded.

Coun. Best: I think there is a by-law to that effect now.

The Clerk said that was so, and thought that the matter might be considered by the Committee, who would have to meet this week.

PLAGUE OF CATERPILLARS.

Coun. Langford said that the Mayor, in his inaugural address in January spoke of the caterpillars. A gentleman had been speaking to him about these pests, and told him that the trees were filled with their little nests. They ought to do something to try and get rid of them. In Toronto and some of the Western cities they give so much to boys for every hundred nests they brought in, and in this way millions of caterpillars were got rid of

THE CURRENT HELPS THINGS TO GROW WITH GOOD RESULTS.

Frenchmen know the secret—Seeds, flowers, grapes, strawberries and vegetables showing extraordinary vigor when electricity is applied.

It has long been known that the electricity in the atmosphere plays an important part in the stimulation of vegetable growth, but hitherto no practical use has been made of this knowledge.

The results recently obtained by some French scientists, who have been experimenting with the effects of electricity on plants indicate that a most valuable aid to agriculture has been discovered. A plant deprived of atmospheric electricity by covering it with a network of fine steel wires a foot with away and dies; when artificially stimulated by an electric current it blossoms with far more vigor than in a normal condition.

With these data to work upon the experimenters moistened seeds with water and then subjected them to the influence of an electric current. The seeds thus treated grew with far more vigor and came to maturity sooner than those not so treated. They even succeeded in making date stones grow, which is a very unusual thing to happen in France.

Peas, beans and maize grew with astonishing swiftness when treated with the powerful current of a Ruhmkorff coil and the yield was greater than ordinary. Experiments with batteries were not so successful when the current was passed through the earth, because of the difference in the resistance of the soil in various places to the passage of the current. The resulting crop was uneven in character, according to one particular section receiving more or less of the electric current. With the powerful electrical machines much more satisfactory results were obtained. Strawberries in particular were ripened in a remarkably short time.

Electrical machines are far too expensive, however, for a farmer to use, and though all right in theory they are too costly in practice.

The new invention is called the geomagnetifere, and consists of an ordinary pole forty or fifty feet high, surmounted with a chevron of fine copper spikes, designed to act as a collector of atmospheric electricity. This collector is insulated from the pole by a porcelain knob, and connects with a copper wire (also insulated from the pole), which transmits the current to a network of wires which are laid under the soil at a depth of about six feet. These wires are made of galvanized iron, and their cost is not large.

By the use of this apparatus the production on a given area has been increased 50 per cent. The grapes from vineyards in which the geomagnetifere is used are richer in sugar and alcohol than ordinary grapes. Flowers have a stronger perfume also when stimulated in this manner.

The exact chemical action which the current has upon fruits and vegetables cannot be determined. It is only certain that such action takes place. Some hold that it acts by adding the plants to assimilate the acids of the atmosphere, while others think that it favors the assimilation of certain mineral salts in the soil.

The experiment can be tried on any lawn or flower bed so long as the pole is away from the house. If too close it acts as a lightning conductor, but without giving any protection.

It is estimated that a geomagnetifere sixty feet high will enrich the soil to the same degree as ten times its cost in manure. At the present time a successful farmer has to be something of a chemist, and it now seems as though he will have to be an electrician, too.

A NEW CURE FOR ERYSIPELAS.

Colorless Liquid With an Extraordinary Name Dr. Marmorek Has Made.

It is reported that a Parisian physician, Marmorek by name, has discovered a new serum for the cure of erysipelas, puerperal fever and bronchial pneumonia. This recently discovered remedy has been given the peculiar and lengthy name of Anti-streptococcococcus. It has been seen at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, and is a thin, colorless liquid, resembling water in almost every detail. No word has come so far as to its success or whether any really definite cures have been made.

As a matter of fact, there is only a very small quantity of it as yet in existence—little more than a tiny vialful, indeed, but this is sufficient to have aroused pretty nearly all Paris—that section of it it least which takes an interest in medical affairs and in the science of curing diseases—into making frequent inquiries and regarding the discovery as of great practical importance. Dr. Marmorek says that he is best on every hand with requests for a small quantity of the serum on the part of both physicians and sufferers, and he has been obliged to shut out the public and the medical fraternity for a time until he has prepared more of the precious liquid.

His reason for so acting is his remembrance of the time of the discovery of the antitoxine cure, when the Institute was besieged by anxious crowds demanding the new remedy and offering large sums of money for even a little of it. When the doctors then explained to them that it was impossible to give them what they asked for because there was no supply of it on hand, the crowd returned and upbraided the Pasteur physicians violently, calling them unhuman and brutal. Dr. Marmorek is anxious that such a scene shall not occur in connection with his discovery. In a month and a half Marmorek claims that he will have an ample supply and will meet all demands that may be made upon him.

Deadly work of the New Bullet, Sir Benjamin Baker, in a paper on "War and Engineering," calls attention to the devastation which the small-bore rifle effects in the human body. He says: "The magazine rifle bullet, though no larger in diameter than a lead pencil, does not simply perforate a bone, but 'the part is always powdered; fragments are frequently carried out through the wound of exit, which is commonly converted into a gaping orifice, the muscles are pulped, and, in fact, the limb mangled and damaged beyond repair.' It may not reasonably be contended, therefore, that by supplying soldiers with a weapon which kills or maims for life everyone a bone of whose body is touched by a bullet even at a mile's distance, and further, by making victims and vanquished suffer equally, and the cost of killing a man to be incomparably greater than of old, engineering science has done more to make war unprofitable than all the army tactics of the world will ever be able to undo. However much they may endeavor to direct attention.

BIRTH ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Some of the Various Ways in Which Newspapers Print Them.

Of all the things that appear in the regular and ordinary 'make-up' of a newspaper, birth notices are perhaps the most amusing. They find their way into both metropolitan and country newspapers. The latter especially seem to like them. The cross-roads correspondent seems such a curious important item, hence their frequent appearance in The Pine Hill Epistle. Some papers have particular columns or spaces devoted to birth, marriage and obituary news. Others record the same events under the titles "Cradle," "Altar" and "Tomb," while a third class use three words in the headline, "Yells," "Belles" and "Kisses."

The following are a few notices clipped at random from papers all over the United States and Canada, says The Chicago Times-Herald. Some are to the point, while others convey more information than is necessary:

A little gentleman arrived at G. Erickson's last week, apparently quite determined to make that his future home. All concerned are doing well.

The Lakeland Bridge Matter

On Saturday last Mr. Lang, the popular member for East Peterborough, in company with Mr. Collingwood, a member of the House of Commons, and Mr. G. H. Pope, a member of the House of Commons, and Mr. R. B. Rogers, Superintendent of the Public Works, held a conference in the town hall. The decision arrived at by the Deputy Minister was to the effect that the high level bridge scheme would be adhered to, the ultimate cost being much less than a swing, which would involve large and continuous expense for attendance. It is said that public sentiment is largely veering towards the high level bridge. The high level bridge at the Norfolk road is said to have its most objectionable features in its completed form, and Mr. Schreiber pointed out to the gathering in the town hall that, when all was completed at Lakeland, the appearance and inconvenience would not be as objectionable as anticipated. Those having property in the vicinity are claiming damages, and though the decision of the Deputy Minister is final, it is not satisfactory to many property owners, who, it is said, will present claims for damages to business and property.

Thanksgiving Fund

Rev. John Potts, D. D., educational secretary of the Methodist church, publicly proposes raising a million dollars for the Methodist twentieth century fund giving fund similar to the million pound fund being raised by the English Wesleyans. Mr. Potts says it can be done easily by the members and adherents of the Methodist church in Canada, Newfoundland and Japan. He will ask the General Conference to endorse it and to say how the fund shall be divided. So sure is he that it will be raised, that he has outlined how it should, in his opinion be divided; chiefly, he thinks between the superannuation fund and educational institutions. It should, according to his proposal, be completed by January 1st, 1901. In view of great success in raising money for Victoria University, the task of raising the million dollars is, it is thought, likely to fall on him, by direction of the General Conference.

WARGRAVE

A Strange Tale of St. Valentine's Eve...

BY JANE SEYMOUR.

[Written for The Times.]

It was St. John's Eve—Midsummer's Eve as well—when my friend and I, after a long walk up the mountain side, sat together in a quaint old drawing room. We were comfortably seated near a long, low lattice window, indulging in a luxury of silence and repose following and anxious tramp over stony roads leading from the margin of the sea to my host's eagle nest of an abode embowered in green and perched on the very edge of one of the many steep cliffs of Pembroke-shire. We had been sitting for some time, not framed by the lattice, but the lovely colors were fading now, barred by the leaden diamond panes. The white light of the day was streaming through the partially opened casement was wafting its fragrance into the darkening room—the unattractive tray in which flowers gave forth in the early evening of the dew falls on them. Breaking the silence at length, my friend said:

"Do you remember that to-night is St. John's Eve—Midsummer's Eve?" "Yes," I replied. "I presume that Shakespeare wrote his immortal 'Midsummer Night's Dream' on this very night more than three centuries ago. Legends tell us that to-night of all nights in the year the woods are peopled with fairy folk and even with grim witches. The Church Calendar has inspired more than one of the poets, my friend continued. 'For instance, there is Keats' 'St. Agnes' Eve.' Apropos of saints' days, I could tell you a very interesting tale of St. Valentine's Eve, although the God of Love plays very little part in it save in an indirect manner. The truth of the story is vouchsafed for by a veracious and charming London friend of mine."

How interesting, I exclaimed, "and how auspicious the time for listening to it!" As I waited for the beginning of the tale, a deeper shade seemed to fall on the room in which we were sitting, and the slender silver sceptre of the new moon defined itself in the rosy afterglow of the western sky.

"I will not ring for candles," said my friend St. Maur, dropping his voice and glancing about the now nearly dark room, "because the story is a strange one, and perhaps it can be better told in the dark. You know," he added, "there are more things in heaven and on earth than were ever dreamt of in anybody's philosophy."

"This story will be wholly in keeping with the night and my own mood," I exclaimed enthusiastically, and settling myself once more in my chair, I prepared to listen with attention to what St. Maur was about to relate. At this moment, St. Maur's hand entered the drawing room with light, for the stars were beginning to shine in the deep blue sky. He was instructed to light the candles in the sconces at the end of the room and to withdraw with the other lights, which he did quickly and noiselessly.

The clusters of wax candles now alight in the sconces dimly defined objects at the other end of the drawing room. At our end of the room, nothing could be seen but the pallid fingers of the white climbing rose pointing through the casement.

"I will tell you this story," said St. Maur, "nearly as possible in the words of the friend to whom I am indebted for it."

Without further preface, St. Maur began: "On the Thames, not many miles from London—in fact to be quite precise, at Wargrave—is situated a fine old manor house, now in the possession of the mother of the well-known African explorer and the man who opened up the Dark Continent to England, Mr. Frederick Selous. This place, still famed for its beauty, is also interesting from the very air of melancholy which seems to cling to its many gables and turrets shrouded in ivy. In the time of the Regent, nearly a hundred years ago, it was the home of the Barrymores, and then in the zenith of its fame and splendor. The Lord Barrymore of that period, a young man of twenty-seven years, was a courtier to the finger tips, and famous alike for his beauty, wit, and dissolute courses of life. He was an ardent admirer of and personal friend to the Regent, whom he had the honor to entertain—But always incognito—many times at Barrymore House. Both the Regent and Lord Barrymore were splendid patrons of the histrionic art and devoted to the stage, counting among their admirers many noted actors and actresses of the day, and numbering among their personal friends most of the celebrated playwrights of the period. The servants of Barrymore House were in variously men, all maid servants being rigidly excluded. When the Regent came to Barrymore House it was by night, and always in disguise—generally in a complete suit of armor, the casque of which was closed. Many a night in those days might have been seen a boat dropping silently and swiftly down the Thames, towards Wargrave, in the bow of which sat a stately figure enveloped in a cloak, between the folds of which at times the

Trouble

When the yellow flag of quarantine is hoisted over a dwelling it means disease and danger. So when the yellow flag flies in the face—when the cheek is sallow and the clear white of the eye is dyed saffron—there is danger. It is liver trouble. The liver is one of the most important organs of the body. On the proper discharge of its functions depend human health and happiness. When the liver fails of its duty, poisons at once begin to generate, and other organs of the body become involved. Never neglect the liver if you value health. If you are suffering from liver trouble, begin at once the use of AYER'S PILLS and you will find prompt relief and permanent cure.

"I was so weakened by liver trouble that I could scarcely lift my head. While in this condition I began the use of Ayer's Pills, and finding almost immediate benefit, continued their use until I was cured of my complaint."

moonbeams would suddenly glint on polished steel. The rowers were gentlemen of the Court attending the Regent. As the boat touched the pier at the foot of the terraced lawns of Barrymore House, the Regent, closely surrounded by a body-guard of gentlemen carrying their rapiers in their hands, would walk with muffled tread over the velvet lawns and through an avenue of yews to an unknown entrance in the crypt beneath the chapel of Barrymore, where the dead perhaps were sometimes disturbed by dreams of coming revels to last long and late above in a sealed chamber of one of the turrets of the house—a place that had been fitted up by Lord Barrymore with the greatest possible elegance and luxury in which to entertain his royal visitor without the knowledge of the world or, in general, of the inmates of the manor house. This particular suite of rooms was sealed by Lord Barrymore only be reached through a hidden door in the crypt, which opened into a long, narrow and dark passage, and up a stairway connected with the famous turret called in after years the "King's Tower."

The room had grown cold, and the drawing room door was swaying to and fro. The tapers in the sconces, too, were flaming wildly; and a sudden gust of wind, sweeping down the drawing room's length, blew out the light. St. Maur laughed a little uncomfortably. I thought, and rose to relight the candles and close the lattice window. After doing so he resumed his narrative.

"In the park at Wargrave, there is a curious and irregular old building which has been put to a variety of uses in the past century. It was built by Lord Barrymore originally for a theatre, and used during his lifetime for that purpose. Here the Regent and his friends have many and many a time applauded the famous players, of both sexes, of the day. Later, the place was put to baser uses, being utilized even to stable horses. But since the present owners of Barrymore House have lived at Wargrave the building has been converted by Mr. Selous into a museum in which are kept many strange and interesting objects gathered by their celebrated owner in his explorations and many long and dangerous journeys."

THEY WILL USE NO OTHER KIND

No class of women are more deeply interested in successful and economical home dyeing than the wives of farmers. For long years the Diamond Dyes have been their choice. They know that they can depend upon each and every color made, and always obtain the most perfect results. Mrs. Edward Belmont, Bear River, N. B., gives her opinion of the Diamond Dyes as follows: "I am a farmer's wife and send a word of praise for the Diamond Dyes. They are just what you represent them to be. We never like to be without them in the house, they are so useful and give such rich and lasting colors."

READ WHAT PHYSICIANS SAY OF POND'S EXTRACT

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 29, 1894.
I have used "Pond's Extract" for many years and always insist upon my patients getting "Pond's," not the ordinary Extract, which is often a very poor article. W. K. BROWN, M. D.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 9, 1895.
I use Pond's Extract a great deal in my practice. I think it very valuable in all venous enlargements.

J. L. BRADFORD, M. D.
SANTA BARBARA, CAL., Nov. 27, 1894.

I have been using Pond's Extract in my practice for twenty years. I frequently have the experience you mention of druggists insisting they can put up as good as yours. I don't believe it. I use Pond's Extract a great deal as an antiseptic in combination with glycerine and carbolic acid. I think it far superior to any antiseptic known. F. G. FLOURNOY, M. D.

COLUMBIA, PA., Jan. 18, 1895.
I have been a constant user of Pond's Extract since 1852, and do not expect to discontinue it while I live. S. ARMOR, M. D.

CHELSEA, MASS., Nov. 8, 1894.

I have made diseases of the skin a specialty for thirty years, and am free to say I know of no remedy that has given me such perfect satisfaction as Pond's Extract in cases for which it is recommended.

G. W. BABCOCK, M. D.

ASTHMATIC INSTITUTE, Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 8, 1894.

I know Pond's Extract to be a valuable remedy, and shall continue its use whenever the opportunity offers.

GEO. H. CALKINS, M. D.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 13, 1894.

I am pleased with the purity and strength of Pond's Extract.

J. L. DURYEE, M. D.

POND'S EXTRACT is used by the leading physicians and principal hospitals of America and Europe.

Felcher Gets His Money

Lem Felcher, the Peterborough saloon-keeper, who was bounced out of $100 a short time ago, and who went to Boston to try and punish the swindler, recovered his cash. He, in company with a detective, visited the horse-men of the city, and in this way got on the trail of the rascal who swindled him. It is satisfactory to know that Felcher, who did a generous thing when he cashed the worthless draft, has saved himself from loss, although the fellow who committed the outrage goes free.

To the Farmers:

Sir—Seedling time will soon be on for barley. Those wishing to sow it this year should get a good quality of seed. The reason barley is low in price is the dirty barley brought to market. When we steep a hundred bushels we lose from ten to twelve bushels, which is light barley, dirt and oats. This being lost, we have to give. If the farmers will give us good barley we are willing to pay a fair price for it.

H. CALCUTT, Brewer and Malster.

Pile! Pile! Itching Piles

Symptoms—Moisture, intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate and become very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia. Lyman Ross & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents.

A Runaway

A horse attached to a cutter took fright yesterday on Water street and ran northward. When near the hollow in the street at the edge of the river, the rig collided with a telephone pole and the occupant, who tenaciously held on to the reins was thrown violently forward, and turned a complete somersault as he passed clean over the horse's head, and alighted in front of the passing crowd without injury. The shafts of the cutter were broken, but no other injury was done.

To the Ladies

Mr. R. H. Kells attended the great sale of dry goods and clothing of the stock of the Army and Navy store in Toronto, which is in liquidation, last week, and purchased a large quantity of black crepons. These goods are perfectly new and were purchased at a very low price. Mr. Kells is ever alert in securing bargains for his many customers, and these goods are now on sale in his store, and are genuine bargains.

Leary's New Every-Ready

OPENING OF SPRING ASSIZES

Not Much Business got Through With Yesterday

The Spring Assizes, Mr. Justice Ferguson presiding, opened yesterday afternoon. The barristers in attendance were: S. H. Blake, Q.C., Toronto; W. R. Riddell, Q.C., Toronto; G. G. McPherson, and J. Maybee, Stratford; T. A. McGilivray, Whitby; R. Ruddy, Millbrook; D. W. Dumble, W. A. Stratton, W. H. Moore, E. B. Edwards, Geo. Edmondson, R. M. Denistoun, D. O'Connell, R. R. Hall, F. D. Kerr, and R. E. Wood.

The Grand Jury was composed as follows:—C. Armstrong, Richard Burnes, Geo. Stewart, Thomas Thompson, Otonabee; Jas. Andrews, Asphodel; Paul Costello, Ennismore; W. M. Graham, Lakefield; Jas. Middleton, Smith; Geo. Payne, Dummer; J. J. McBain, Peterborough. Mr. Stewart was chosen foreman.

In addressing the Grand Jury His Lordship congratulated them and the county on the fact that there was no criminal cases to be brought before them. There was a number of prisoners, he stated, in the goal, for the most part vagrants; one was insane and some were undergoing sentences, but none were to come before the Grand Jury. For this reason his remarks were of a very limited nature.

His Lordship afterwards called the civil case of Hall vs. McPherson and the case of the plaintiffs against one of the defendants, which was a postponement, which was granted, and the case of Bonner vs. the Township of South Monaghan et al. was called and had not been concluded when the Court rose.

CHARLIE GLODMAN'S FAREWELL SERMON

Preached in the Hot House Tabernacle Sunday, March 6th

Gentlemen of the Gould Lake Hunting Club:

Inasmuch as I am now on the eve of a departure for the land of gold and other things material and visionary, and am about to exchange the musical notes of the bounds for the mournful wailing of coyotes, the flies of a short summer for the rigors of an Arctic winter, from the balmy temperature of the hot house, presided over by the genial discoverer of Baptist Point, I bid you all a fond adieu, and when my legs are weary and my heart heavy with thoughts of trails left and others yet to be discovered, then, and not till then, will I sigh for Sam Ray and his marvelous abilities as a woodsman. To you all I leave the legacy of a hearty handshake, and with this I say again, not good bye, but au revoir.—Com.

The Board of Education

The Board of Education has awarded the contract for the stationery supplies to the Review for the ensuing year. There were three tenders—one from the Times, one from the Review, and one from the Peterborough Bookstore. The Times' tender was only a few dollars over the Review. It is said, in connection with this contract, that there has been some "funny" business going on. In fact, it is said the contract had been awarded to Mr. Stratton by the committee, when one of the members, who happened to be a little behind time, dropped in and insisted in having the matter reopened, against the wishes of Dr. Caldwell, the chairman, and others of the committee. The result was that all parties had a fair show, and the contract very properly went to the Review.

Forty Millions to be Voted for Americas Defence

THE WAR TALK SUBSIDING

General Belief that Peace Will be Sustained

The Feeling in Madrid—Reinforcements Will Probably Continue Amicable Appropriations Committee of Congress Favor Voting $50,000,000 for National Defence Force for McKinley—Spain Furnishing Ships

(Special to the Times.)

Washington, March 8.—The Appropriations Committee of the House at the meeting this morning unanimously agreed to report favorably the bill to appropriate $50,000,000 for the national defence.

Madrid, March 8.—A semi-official news agency of this city issued to-day the following announcement: "After brief uncertainty, there is general belief now that peace will not be broken, and that the relations between United States and Spain will continue amicable."

"Political personages assert that the late sensational despatches are completely wrong in attributing an aggressive tone to the diplomatic relations between the two Governments, which have not for a single moment lost their friendly character."

London, March 8.—The Times says editorially this morning: "If Spain is placed in an awkward position respecting the Lee incident she must think the insubordination of her foreign office. Mr. Cannon's bill can hardly be explained by the Lee incident. It is probably due to rumors that Spain is purchasing war vessels."

"We do not believe that Spain desires war, but if she does this evidence of America's alertness offers a most effective check. President McKinley appears to be adhering loyally to the policy of firmness, caution and pacific circumlocution by his highest officers. No doubt he has the support of the sober and conscientious mass of the American people; but he has had to face outbreaks of popular clamor that a weaker man might have mistaken for the voice of a country."

"The complexity of the Spanish Government in the Maine disaster is a hypothesis too monstrous and irrational to be entertained; and except that there is nothing impossible of arrangement between Spain and America, the intricate nature of Cuban disorders cannot but inspire thoughtful Americans with a serious doubt as to the wisdom of annexation."

The Daily News in its editorial on the Cuban situation says: "We cannot doubt as to the ultimate result of a war between the United States and Spain but America may have a bad quarter of an hour before victory. European alliances against the United States may be left out of the question, despite the talk of Spain's friends."

New York, March 8.—The naval reserve forces of New York are to be increased. W. H. Shytle, commander, telegraphed his executive officer, Lieut. L. P. Forsberg, from Washington to-day to begin the work of recruiting immediately. According to the Paris correspondent of the Herald, the Spanish Government has given orders for the purchase of rapid firing guns of the Caliber of 14 and 16 centimeters in France. They are supposed to be for the Spanish iron-clad Carlos V, now at Havana completing her armament.

Jacksonville, Fla., March 8.—The steam tug Duaneless was detained yesterday by the government of a war vessel. The vessel is now in the charge of a deputy marshal.

New York, March 8.—A special to the Herald from Washington says: Secretary Long has just ordered to duty as a member of the board of inspection and survey, to leave at once for England and France to inspect the vessels which have been offered to this Government and to report without delay if they are suitable for service in the United States navy. Commander Brown, who will not only look at the vessels which have been offered, but will examine other warships under construction for foreign nations, and should he report that his corps has tested the torpedo cable submarine mines and other means of coast and harbor defence and found them perfect. Supplies for a similar defence have been ordered to Boston, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah and Key West.

New York, March 8.—The Evening Post yesterday had the following copyrighted cablegram from its London correspondent:

Special enquiries in official and financial circles to-day show that of the many grave international difficulties pending in China, Japan, West Africa, the Nile, and elsewhere, the most serious view is taken at the moment of the American-Spanish tension. At the United States and Spanish Embassies the utmost reticence, of course, is observed. They pretended to know nothing, and it is noteworthy, in view of reports that the Armstrongs have sold cruisers to Spain, that the Armstrongs' Board has given express directions that no questions are to be answered respecting their dealings with British or foreign Governments.

What cannot be denied is that the Armstrongs have had relations with Spain since 1886, have built several cruisers to Spain's orders, and now have vessels on the stocks that could be sold if money were forthcoming.

Is French money helping Spain? Two of the first financial bodies were asked this question. Their replies may be grouped thus: "Nothing of the kind" has been definitely arranged, and, obviously, seeing the large French financial interests in Spain, French financiers will be most anxious to keep Spain from war, but it is equally certain that if Spain should decide that war, however desperate, was the only escape from the growing financial troubles at home, Paris and not London, would be the quarter whence money would be sought, and, beyond doubt, obtained. As yet, however, nothing has been definitely settled."

The facts probably is that Spain is anxious to buy cruisers, and the Armstrongs are ready to sell if they can see the money. The French financiers have not yet agreed to advance the necessary money so long as by holding back they can assist the cause of peace.

A CHILI KLONDIKE

EXPEDITION FROM NEW YORK DELAYED FOR WANT OF FUNDS

(Special to the Times.)

New York, March 8.—A despatch to The Herald from Valparaiso, Chile, says: The American steamer Columbia, which started from here for the Klondike, is still lying here waiting for funds. Her supplies are liable to be cut off, as her captain has been unable to raise money and her owners in New York have failed to send him money to pay for repairs, provisions and coal.

The passengers, twenty of whom are women, are becoming desperate. There is a possibility of the ship being seized for debt. Americans here are indignant over the conduct of the vessel's owner. The United States consul can do nothing as matters now stand.

A PRINCE IN NEW YORK

Heir-Apparent of the Belgian Throne Not in Search of a Wife

His Royal Highness Studying Political Economy—He is Athletic and His Hobby is the Bicycle

(Special to the Times.)

New York, March 8.—The heir apparent of the Belgian throne, Prince Albert, was a passenger on the steamship Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, which arrived in port this morning. It is declared that he is coming to this country to pursue his study of political economy and to inquire into manufacturing and industrial interests. It is pretty clear that he is not in search of an American wife, it having been semi-officially announced in Brussels that he was to wed his cousin, the Princess Clementine, who was engaged to his ill-fated brother, the late Prince Radouin.

Prince Albert is twenty-two years old. He is athletic. According to reports of his character, he is not the slave of the vices to which his royal uncle, King Leopold, is subject. His full name is Albert Leopold Clement Marie Maurand. His mother was the Princess Maria of Hohenzollern. His paternal grandmother was a daughter of Louis Philippe, King of France.

QUITE UNOSTENTATIOUS

It is said of this prince that he is finely educated and is thoroughly unostentatious. His father, the Count of Flanders, possesses many noble traits which the son has inherited. The Count of Flanders has declared that should King Leopold die before him he will relinquish his claim to the throne in favor of his son. On all public occasions, the Count of Flanders walks behind his son. The always refers to the prince as his heir.

Prince Albert is travelling incognito as Count de Lathuy. He will be entertained in this city by the highest officials of the nation in Washington. The Belgian Minister, Count de Lathuy, met the prince upon the latter's arrival. Count de Lathuy will escort Prince Albert to Washington, where he will be the Minister's guest at the Netherlands.

DINE WITH THE PRINCE

Prince Albert will call upon the secretary of State John Sherman, who will take him to the White House, and present him to President McKinley. A dinner will be given in his honor by President McKinley on Friday evening next. On the following evening a dinner will be given to him by Vice-President and Mrs. Hobart. The president will be followed by a reception, given by the Belgian Minister.

The Prince is fond of the wheel. That sport is his main hobby. Inasmuch as Washington affords fine opportunities for bicycling, it

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 9, 1897

NO CHANGE IN THE SITUATION

PASSENGER RATE WAR SEEMS NO NEARER A SOLUTION.

The railway rate war situation remains unchanged. The Canadian Pacific officials have no new movement to announce, and the Grand Trunk people are not likely to do anything unless action is invited by some development on the part of the enemy. All concerned are quite frank about admitting the obscurity of the end of it all. It is conceded on all hands that the difficulty is as unpalatable as it was months ago. The C.P.R. will not talk to the American roads until they agree to restore former tariffs, allowing them their differentials, while the Grand Trunk will confer at any time and place but refuse to restore the differentials in the meantime. Thus the matter stands to-day.

In the meantime the two Canadian disputants are doing a rushing business. For instance, when the C.P.R. reduced its St. John's rate to twenty-five cents the Grand Trunk carried the train crew, but very few more. Now they say that since their rate is the same as that of the C.P.R. they are considering the question of increasing the capacity of their train to great extent. People to that place. Notwithstanding the fact that this is not a favorite time of year for travelling, nearly all trains are crowded by people taking advantage of the low rates.

QUEBEC AND LEVIS RATE.

The Canadian Pacific and the Intercolonial division of the Canadian Government System of Railways have come to an arrangement whereby the rate to Levis and Quebec will not be restored to its former full status for another week, although the very low rate quoted last week will not be in force. It will be remembered that $1.15 was the single fare figure then, while for one week commencing on Monday it will be $1.00 single and $6.70 return. The old rate was $1.50.

WARGRAVE

BY JANE SEYMOUR.

We were interrupted here, again by the entrance of St. Maur's man with coffee. He placed the tray on a table at my friend's elbow, and proceeded to light the candles in the candelabra on the chimney-piece and in different corners about the room; and lastly he drew a warm-looking crimson satin curtain, heavily embroidered with silver flowers, the length of the rod above the lattice window, shutting out the night and the sound of the rustling wind sighing over the mountain tops. In England, even summer nights are often cold, and a fire on the hearth is comfortable all the year round.

"Kindle a blazing fire in the smoking room to-night, William," said my host, proceeding to pour the coffee himself, and remember to place cigars and a couple of bottles of Red Labelled vintage near the fire," he concluded, as his servant withdrew.

"It is too light and comfortable here now, either to tell or to listen to this tale," said St. Maur to me, "but if you care to hear conclusion we can adjourn later to the smoking room and the fire, for the night has grown very chilly, and the wind has begun to moan on the mountain top, which always presages a storm here."

"It is about ten o'clock St. Maur and I left the drawing room, and taking our candles from the table at the foot of a fine old oak staircase, which was highly polished and dark with age, we ascended to the next story by winding turns and through a wide hall above corresponding with the entrance hall below, and through an ante room opening into a long picture gallery, at the end of which a leather curtain concealed the entrance into my friend's smoking room.

"Not a bad place here for a family ghost," I exclaimed, as we walked through the picture gallery. I held my candle high over my head and glanced at ladies with powdered hair and gentlemen in ruffs who stared silently out of their dark frames as we passed, as if resenting the intrusion.

"We have a very respectable ghost," said St. Maur, drily; "but as his excellency only puts in an appearance once in a quarter of a century, his is not the shade with which we have to do to-night. This is the ghost's portrait, however," he added, pointing before a half-length Romney hanging by the left side of the entrance of the smoking room.

After examining the portrait, I followed St. Maur into the smoking room. Without, the wind was blowing steadily now but within, all was cheerful and bright. The logs on the hearth were blazing up the wide chimney, and would soon emit a gentle glow. On opposite sides of a round table, near by, were placed two lounging chairs, and the servant had not forgotten the apéritifs and cigars. I immediately made myself comfortable in one of the chairs, and awaited my friend's continuation of his story.

"On the 13th of last February," said St. Maur, "I was invited by Mr. Selous to make one of a house party at Wargrave. On the evening of my arrival at Barrymore House, I was seated at dinner beside a very clever woman, an Egyptologist, who shall be nameless because she is a lady. I had taken her into dinner. While we were eating, my Egyptian friend casually remarked: 'I suppose, of course, that you know the history of this house?' 'Yes,' I replied, 'in a way, I do. It has a long pedigree, and not a very canny one.' 'I pronounced this remark very interdictively. 'To-morrow evening,' said she, 'I will tell you what I know about the place.' 'But why not to-night?' I urged. 'I have a particular reason for postponing the confidence until to-morrow,' the lady replied. As I glanced at her with a slightly surprised air, she added: 'I will tell you the reason of the postponement also. 'I presume that during my stay here I am to be relegated to the unfurling laundress chamber,' I resignedly remarked. 'No,' the lady quickly responded, 'your visit is to be here, always an interesting subject to her, a believer in reincarnation.' 'In point of religion, fin-de-siècle, is she not?' I asked, in a low tone. The lady of the lotos gave me a warning glance.

"On joining the ladies in the drawing room after dinner, I immediately requested an introduction in proper form from my host to the lady who had sat opposite to me at the table. I wished if possible to ascertain the real state of her mind at the prospect of being in occupation of the haunted chamber in Barrymore House.

"My efforts, however, in that direction entirely failed. The lady talked to me readily on different subjects, and appeared to be altogether imperturbable. I did not refer directly to the fact of the haunted chamber having been assigned to her. During our conversation she related to me many interesting and true stories of the strange old house in which we were both staying, some of which I have already told you earlier this evening.

"Barrymore House was full to overflowing with guests at this particular time, but curiously enough there was one person in the drawing room that evening whom I had neither observed at dinner nor in this room until just as the company was dispersing for the night.

"As Mrs. Egerton—I am using for convenience a fictitious name—was about to leave the drawing room, I observed a person of very striking appearance suddenly emerge from behind the folds of a curtain of one of the drawing room windows and, quickly crossing the room, precede Mr. Selous who was walking towards the door leading from the room into the large hall to open it for Mrs. Egerton, who was retreating for the night.

"Before Mr. Selous reached the door, the unknown person stood aside for it to be opened, and to my surprise passed out of the room before the lady.

"I hastily ran over in my mind the list of guests at Barrymore House, but could not recollect this particular gentleman. I enquired afterward of Mr. Selous the name of this guest.

"For a moment, Mr. Selous seemed surprised at the question, and, after hesitating for a minute, asked me for a description of the person, which I readily gave, as the face and figure had made a deep impression on me.

"After I had described the personage, Mr. Selous said gravely and quickly: 'You must have seen Lord Barrymore. As we are retiring for the night, if you like I will show to you the gentleman's portrait.'

"But why not introduce me to the original I asked.

"Simply because this gentleman died by his own hand nearly a century ago," was the reply.

"Oh come, that is drawing it rather strong," I exclaimed.

"Nevertheless it is a fact," Mr. Selous concluded in a positive tone.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 20, 1894.
I have used "Pond's Extract" for many years and always insist upon my patients getting "Pond's," not the ordinary Extract, which is often a very poor article. W. K. BROWN, M. D.

I use Pond's Extract a great deal in my practice. I think it very valuable in all venous enlargements.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., Nov. 27, 1894.
I have been using Pond's Extract in my practice for twenty years. I frequently have the experience you mention of druggists insisting they can put up as good as yours. I don't believe it. I use Pond's Extract a great deal as an antiseptic in combination with glycerine and carbolic acid. I think it far superior to any antiseptic known.

—Yesterday was an "off day" at the Police Court.

—Buy your stationery at the Times Bookstore, and save money.

—There will be a meeting of the Victoria Bicycle Club to-night.

—Mr. H. P. Kennedy shipped by a special train on the Grand Trunk nine cars of stockers, consisting of about 400 head, to Iowa, 200 miles west of Chicago.

—On Monday evening Mr. J. Carlew's little daughter met with an accident. She fell over the balustrade of the stairs in the hotel hall, alighting on her head on the floor eight or ten feet below. The little one was pretty badly shaken up, but no bones were broken. Dr. Mohr was called in and the child is nearly as well now as ever.

—The caterpillar question referred to at last Monday's council meeting will likely prove a serious affair if not grappled with. A few twice-broken off trees on which the caterpillars have been brought into the Times office. The eggs look innocent enough now, but when hatched—well, that is another story, as Rudyard Kipling says.

—There will be general satisfaction among Peterborians that the council are about to take in hand the improvement of the sidewalks, some of which are an unbecoming disgrace to our town. The street crossings might also receive with advantage some little attention. However, we must take one step at a time and then we shall not come to grief.

A Marvellous Performance.
This is the way the Chatham Banner speaks of Mr. Ramsey, who will appear in the Opera House to-night and to-morrow night under the auspices of the Lacrosse club:

A crowded house greeted the talented artist, Mr. W. E. Ramsey, in his new and wonderful entertainment, "Begone Dull Care," which consists of scene, song and story. The scenes, which are many and startling, are given with the aid of Lumiere's latest cinematographs and manipulated by Mr. Joseph Millet from Lumiere's factory in France. The songs and stories are given by Mr. Ramsey in his own inimitable style, raising the utmost enthusiasm in the audience at each and every number. Mr. Ramsey plays his accompaniments. To say the exhibition was wonderful does not describe it, as it needs to be seen to be appreciated.

WESTWOOD

Echoes of the Campaign in East Peterborough.

Three cheers for Bleazard, our popular and trusted M.P.P., who always wins no matter who or what his opposition is!

Our village is proud of our old member, the Father of the Legislative Assembly.

The Tories couldn't "ford" the stream on March 1st. The Bleazard made the ford high.

Our village pined up a glorious majority for the "Old Veteran" on election day.

"Sherry" is a very bad article for a temperance candidate to have along. A grand record—six successive campaigns and never a defeat.

The Tories (those that can) now couldn't get across, singing Polly wolly doodle all this day, etc.

The Grills all sing, "We have sent Tom Bleazard back to Parliament again for a grand old man is he."

The Whitts (those of this village) with Dr. Willoughby, we understand have been conveyed to the Toronto General Hospital for treatment. The Doctor has since died, and the quartette are in a serious condition, scarcely any hopes of their recovery.

Old Ottonab's banner townships the home and birthplace of Mr. Bleazard, did nobly on March 1st. Majorities at every poll, and a grand total of 216.

A lot of torches, a chair, etc., etc., are for sale cheap at the Conservative committee rooms, Norwood. The above articles were never used, and are as good as new.

The election returns were well received here on March 1st—never better. The arrangements were excellent, not a single hitch occurring.

After the returns were received a large bon-fire was built and the crowd waited for the welcome and well-known sound of our old favorite's bells. Shortly after 11 o'clock Mr. Bleazard came from Norwood, when he was seized in strong arms, placed in a chair and carried shoulder high down the street to the bon-fire, where he gave a short speech, thanking the people for the honor done him etc. He was then carried round the streets, the large crowd cheering themselves hoarse. It was a grand welcome home after a hard fight and a glorious victory.

Victory does not turn Mr. Bleazard's head. It certainly pleases him, but does not make him proud. He is the same unassuming, kind and sympathetic friend as ever.

The Fast riding is "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

The Toronto & Hudson Bay Railway Commission.

To the Editor of The Times:
Dear Sir,—The City of Toronto having, by resolution of the Mayor and Aldermen in Council assembled, appointed a Commission composed of the gentlemen above-named for the purpose of obtaining all information regarding the country lying between the City of Toronto and James Bay, and of the navigability and resources of James and Hudson Bays, with a view to the further development and opening up of these districts, by means of additional rail, steamboat and other facilities.

The Commission begs to invite all Companies, Municipalities and individuals interested, to submit for its use such information as they may have regarding the present and proposed extended means of transport or concerning the agricultural, forest, mineral and other resources of any part of the districts mentioned.

Yours respectfully,
W. T. JENNINGS, O.E., Acting Secretary.

THE SPRING ASSIZES

Non-Suit in the Claim for Damages Against Smith Wagonman.

The business of the Spring Assizes was resumed yesterday before his lordship, Justice Ferguson. The Grand Jury made the following presentment: To His Lordship, Chief Justice Ferguson.

The Grand Jurors of our Sovereign, the Queen, beg to present:

We reciprocate your Lordship's congratulations in regard to the freedom of the county from crime. In compliance with your Lordship's instructions we have made a thorough examination of the jail and are pleased to report that we found the condition of the premises in all respects, indicating careful attention to duty on the part of the jailor and officials. We found twenty-three persons confined, of whom, we regret to say, thirteen are vagrants, some greatly advanced in years and in infirm health. We would again firmly call the attention of the authorities to the exceeding impropriety of melting out common punishment to the vicious and the unfortunate whose only crime is their poverty, and in this connection would strongly urge upon the town and county such immediate and prompt co-operation as will insure the erection of a suitable House of Refuge where such unfortunate persons can receive the attention and care which should be expected from a Christian community. We would also point out that there is less excuse for not taking action in this matter, since, by act of the Provincial Legislature, the large sum of $4,000 is placed at the disposal of the county to assist in defraying the cost of the erection of a House of Refuge. To our knowledge learned judges like your Lordship, and grand juries have repeatedly urged this matter upon the local authorities, and we are sure your Lordship will add your influential endorsement to our suggestion that this town and county cannot consistently with the demands of humanity much longer to ignore the necessity of taking steps to prevent the sorrows of destitution, infirmity and misfortune being visited with the punishment due to vice alone.

We visited the Nicholls and St. Joseph's Hospitals, and have to acknowledge the courtesy of a most cordial reception at both places, which we found admirably managed, and doing a splendid work in alleviating the sufferings of the afflicted. The House of Providence in connection with St. Joseph's Hospital seems to be an excellent institution, maintaining in comfort the aged and infirm.

At the Protestant Home we also found the inmates well cared for, and could not but contrast the condition of the comparatively fortunate inmates of both with the unfortunate, who have to be maintained in a felon's cell on prison fare in the county jail.

The most interesting feature of our visit to the public institutions was the Children's Shelter, maintained under the auspices of that noble organization the Children's Aid Society. This institution is doing splendid work, and furnishing them with good Christian homes, is doing a work in the prevention of crime and the interests of virtue that is worthy of the largest recognition. Its benefactions extend to the children of both town and country, and we should suggest that the county would be justified in meeting the grant made by the town for the maintenance of the Children's Shelter, for its beneficial work is considerably limited from lack of means.

We also visited, though not in an official capacity, the new Y.M.C.A. building, and were greatly pleased with the equipment, the possessors, for attending to the physical and moral improvement of young men, and were in this respect indirectly assisting in promoting the good morals of our community, we desire to thus formally recognize the excellent work it is doing.

His Lordship, in reply, agreed with the grand jury most heartily as to the need for the erection of a House of Refuge, and was pleased to learn that the Ontario Government was liberal in its grants towards such institutions. He thought if the County Council would look thoroughly into the matter, and when they discovered the great benefits derived from the small amount involved, Peterborough County would not long be without a House of Refuge.

THE SOUTH MONAGHAN CASE.
Bonnet versus Township of Monaghan, Board of Health and Medical Officer. In this case, which was adjourned from Monday's sittings, Samuel Bonnet sought to recover $500 damages, claiming that when a child of his took the disease spreading and two other children took it and died. Then when the house was fumigated, the plaintiff claims that through negligence it took fire and was burned down. Thirdly, the plaintiff claims that when ordered out of the house with his family, whilst the fumigating was in process, he was told he would be received at a certain homestead, but that admittance was refused him there, and well as at other places, and he had to put a stove in his house and live there. He holds that a proper abode should have been furnished by the authorities.

In answer the defendants stated that the first two of the children who were ill did not have diphtheria, and therefore precautions were not taken to prevent the spread of a disease which did not exist, that when the third child took ill and symptoms of diphtheria were apparent, then precautions were taken; that the burning of the house was not caused through negligence, but for some cause unknown at present, that the plaintiff was not ordered to leave the house, but on the contrary asked that it be fumigated, stating he and his family would go and live with friends in the meantime.

Mr. W. R. Riddell, Q.C., Toronto, and Mr. R. Ruddy, Millbrook, appeared for the plaintiff, while Messrs. Edmonson and Dixon were for the defence.

After a lengthy hearing the case was withdrawn from the jury, and his Lordship entered a non-suit, holding that no responsibility on the part of the defendants had been proved.

14TH ANNUAL CONVENTION

Peterborough Cheesemakers' Association Meet.

The 14th annual convention of the Cheesemakers' Association of Peterborough and Lindsay was held in the Council Chamber, Peterborough, yesterday afternoon, when Mr. F. E. Cline, President, presided over an attendance of between thirty and forty cheesemakers, including Mr. O. F. Kevell, Secretary of the Association, Mr. S. R. Payne, cheese and butter maker for Warsaw Dairy Company, Mr. G. G. Publow, instructor of Kingston Dairy School, and Messrs. George Renwick, B. Thurston, R. H. Little, E. Deyell, W. E. Wood, J. Chetick, J. Brown, A. Wilson, T. E. Kline, T. Portland, G. Gillespie, W. Woods, T. Lowry, J. L. Hatton, F. Gillespie, H. R. Free, R. Allen, D. Haddon, A. S. Grant, J. R. Woods, S. Brinkell, R. Annot, H. Gillespie, W. Paul, J. O'Brien, H. Shinn and Jas. Ryan.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.
The chairman, in inviting the meeting to elect their officers for the ensuing year, said he had now occupied the chair for ten years, and thought they might give someone else a term who would do better.

Mr. Kevell remarked that he should not be known as a cheesemaker this year, and was of opinion that they had better elect one from amongst themselves to take his place as secretary.

The feeling of the meeting was that the members could not do better than re-elect their present officers; and on the proposition of Mr. Geo. Renwick, seconded by Mr. Payne, Mr. Cline was unanimously re-elected as president, and Mr. Kevell as secretary.

The chairman, although he thought there were others who could do better, promised that Mr. Kevell and he would continue to do their best to ensure the success of the Association. He then introduced Mr. Publow, the instructor of Kingston Dairy School, who would be his sure, give them good practical advice.

"GOOD CHEESE FROM GOOD MILK."
Mr. Publow, who was cordially applauded, proceeded to read a paper on cheese-making, in which he dealt with the making of "good cheese from good milk." At the conclusion, he invited gentlemen to speak of troubles which they might experience in their industry.

A general discussion followed. Several questions were answered by Mr. Publow.

PAPER BY MR. S. R. PAYNE.
Mr. S. R. Payne read a paper traversing the subject of instructor or inspector (he preferred the former term) appointed by the Cheesemakers' Board. He said that they must look upon their instructor their leader—a man who must be thoroughly conversant with their needs and difficulties. The instructor should gain a general experience by going out among the factories of the district, where it must be admitted he would find considerable difference in the general character of the cheese. Now, his conception of an instructor's work was that he should strive to bring about uniformity among the factories of this section, getting them all to color, salt, shape, put up and manufacture the cheese in about the same way, thus having the output of the section as from one factory—and that a good factory. By a uniformly fine quality of cheese, Canadians might still retain the first place for their cheese in the British market. They must not forget that that market was open to the world, and if the quality remain fine when compared with New Zealand, Australian, French or United States product, they should be forced into a second position. It was in this respect where their instructor's work would tell as a good and profitable investment. They should make him free to discover any fault which he might observe in them or their surroundings. It was good for them that it should be so. Let them follow their instructor in order that Canada might still lead in this great industry, holding steadily the place she had won in the English market. Let them aim for nothing less than to lead the world in dairy products. (Applause.)

VOTES OF THANKS.
Mr. Publow and Mr. Payne were cordially thanked for their papers, and the usual votes of thanks to the chairman and secretary were also heartily accorded.

A Yankee Battleship at Havana. Spain is a Hard Nut to Crack. Overthrow of the Spanish Ministry Would Mean War—United States Recruits are Practising

(Special to the Times.)

New York, March 9.—A despatch to The World from London says: "Your correspondent saw in the House of Commons lobby the heat of one of the largest and best known ship building firms on the Clyde, who said: 'I know positively that Spain is hunting not only for cruisers, but for eight fast steamships which are to be converted into unarmored cruisers and fitted with quick firing guns. She has been on the lookout for some weeks, but difficulty was, of course, the money. No British ship builder would permit her to remove any craft without prepayment in full.'

"I have also just heard that her contract for the building of these ships has been hanging fire for financial reasons are about being completed, as the Spanish Government has made arrangements for a loan through Fould's Bank of Paris with a French syndicate. Sentiment as well as self interest prompts France to assist Spain against the United States, and France is the only European country where Spain stands the slightest chance of obtaining financial help."

French investors hold about $300,000,000 of Spanish bonds, largely secured by Cuban taxes. If Spain loses Cuba the French speculators will lose the security for their loans. This is why there is a great and powerful interest in France which is trying to avert war or else Spain.

London, March 9.—The indications are that the United States Government will not wait for the arrival of Commander William H. Brownson in order to purchase warships. Definite offers have already been made for ships building here, with the view of forestalling Spain, which is supposed to be bargaining for the same vessels.

THE DRUMMOND DEAL

Investigation Committee Begins Work at Ottawa

Collingwood Schreiber Gives Evidence About Subsidies

(Special to the Times.)

Ottawa, Ont., March 9.—Special to Times.—The investigation into the Drummond county railway has commenced. All the members of the Committee of Enquiry were present at the first meeting, including Messrs. Lister, chairman, Haggart, Borden (Halifax), Fowler, Curran, Morrison, and Loe. Neither Mr. Harwick, counsel for the Government, nor Mr. B. J. Ooster, counsel for Mr. Greenhills, were in attendance. Immediately on the opening of the proceedings Mr. Blair, Minister of Railways, presented himself and asked that an opportunity be given him of giving evidence. The request was agreed to, and the Minister will be examined some day next week.

Mr. Schreiber, Deputy Minister of Railways, was then examined in regard to the subsidies paid by the Federal Government to the Drummond County railway. He testified that from 1877 to 1894, inclusive, a total of $287,920 was paid out to the company in subsidies. Last year a further appropriation was granted for the construction of that part of the line between Moose Park and Chaudiere, a distance of 42 1/2 miles. This subsidy had not yet been earned. The company has made application for an inspection of the line, which was granted over it and reported the work to be unfinished. All the subsidies earned had been paid by cheque to C. R. Church, president of the company, except $82,990, paid to the Eastern Townships Bank.

Mr. Lister—Before the present Government obtained office, were there any negotiations to your knowledge at all as to the purchase of the Drummond County railway?

Witness—Mr. Haggart asked me in July, 1894, to make an estimate of the cost of the road. He produced the estimate in question, which showed that from St. Rosalie, thirty-five miles from Montreal, to Chaudiere, five miles from Levis, a total distance of 40 miles, the cost was $1,350,000. That included the cost of the railway as then built, and an estimate of the cost of the balance remaining to be constructed.

Examined by Mr. Haggart, witness said he had not in his estimate of 1894, distinguished between the value of the work then done and that of the portion remaining to be built, between St. Rosalie and Chaudiere. He had made a later estimate, but it was in the department.

Mr. Schreiber was directed to obtain the estimate in question, and the examination of Mr. J. M. Courtney was then proceeded with. Mr. Courtney produced eleven cheques, covering the subsidies paid by the Government to the Drummond County Railway Company up to 1894. Ten of these were made payable to the company direct, and one to the company's attorneys. The committee determined to summon H. T. Machin, Deputy Provincial Treasurer of Quebec, in order to ascertain what subsidies were paid by the Quebec Government to the Drummond County railway, and adjourned after an hour's sitting until Tuesday of next week.

ENGLAND AND CANADA

GRATIFYING INCREASE IN THE VOLUME OF TRADE.

(Special to the Times.)

The trade between Canada and England is increasing in much greater ratio than the trade between England and other countries. For instance, the exports to Canada for February last show an increase of 23 per cent. upon the figures for the same month of last year. For the first two months of the year the increase was 17 per cent. The exports to all other countries decreased one per cent. in one month and two per cent. in the other. Imports from Canada to England decreased one per cent. during the first month and increased 25 per cent during the second one. From all other countries the increase in imports for the first month was four per cent. and for the second month two per cent. The increased export to Canada occurred largely in goods affected by the new preferential tariff. The articles of export in which increases are visible during the past two months are: Oats $125,000; wheat and flour, $450,000; fish, $230,000. There was a decrease in timber of $175,000.

FRUIT EXPERIMENTS IN ONTARIO.

Results of the First Year's Work in Testing Varieties.

Already the work of the experiment stations of Ontario is making itself known and appreciated. The first annual report, which has just been published by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, has sixty-four pages of valuable reading matter and numerous tables showing the results of the first year's work in testing varieties. As the secretary says in his letter of transmittal, it would be impossible to have results so extended ready for publication this first year were it not that practical fruit growers of long and careful experience in their various lines have been selected as the experimenters. These men are able to draw lessons from the knowledge gained from years of careful work with that variety of fruit which is the specialty of each. In this way the reports from these gentlemen become most valuable to the country.

Apples.—Mr. W. H. Dempsey, Superintendent of the Bay of Quinte station, speaks well of the Winter St. Lawrence, Pawauckee and Ontario apples.

He says the Pawauckee is a large apple and more productive than the King and as good in quality. Of the Ontario he says, "It is one of the most profitable apples we have. My own Ontario apples sold equal to Spys in Montreal." Of the Alexander he says, "This variety is coming more into favor every year as one of the best selling fall apples;" of the Red Astrachan, "It is not desirable to grow here." To the Ben Davis he gives twenty-three marks of value out of a possible forty, and adds that its chief value consists in its long keeping qualities.

Grapes.—Mr. M. Pettit, Superintendent of the Wentworth grape station, gives an interesting table showing the actual production and the various prices per pound which he received for certain varieties in 1904. Thus the Agawam, which was harvested October 22nd, yielded 17½ lbs. of grapes to the vine, of which all but a half pound were first grade; the average selling price was three cents a pound, giving a total income of about fifty cents per vine. The Concord yielded nineteen lbs. per vine and so sold at two cents a pound, or about thirty-eight cents per vine. The Catawba yielded 16½ lbs. and sold at five cents a pound, giving a total of about eighty cents per vine. About thirty varieties of grapes are fully described.

The secretary, in his notes on varieties, speaks favorably of the Victoria grape. He says, "The Victoria, one of the numerous seedlings raised by Mr. B. Miner, of Linden, N. Y., was this year a favorite white grape with me, and I am inclined to think that it will yet take a foremost place among white grapes. The bunches are well shaped; the skin has a fine waxen lustre and heavy bloom, and the berries are of good size and fair quality. The vine is very productive. By some this grape is called a white Concord."

Peaches.—In his notes on peaches, Mr. W. Hillborn, Superintendent of the South-Western station, says, "Alexander, Amenden's June and Early Canada are all practically identical. The four most profitable varieties to grow in this locality have been Alexander, Bernard's Early, Tyhurst Seedling and Hill's (Chill). The two latter are perhaps the most hardy in fruit buds and give a good crop heavily every season. They are probably the best to plant in sections not well adapted to peach culture. Among new varieties the Fitzgerald is perhaps the most promising. It is of the Early Crawford type and apparently an improvement on that old favorite. The fruit buds are hardy and the young trees will begin bearing the second year after planting. The fruit is large; skin, bright yellow suffused with red; flesh, deep yellow, of best quality, stone, not as large as that of the Crawford. Its season of ripening is with or just after the Early Crawford. Boyle's Early is another quite new sort in this locality that is very promising. It is the first yellow flesh peach to ripen with me."

Strawberries.—Mr. R. B. Stevenson, strawberry specialist, describes forty-two varieties, placing the Greenville as the best for productiveness and among the best for quality. It is a large crimson berry originating in Ohio. The Haverland he also ranks very high for productiveness. The Timbrell does not ripen evenly, and the Parker Earle rusts and cannot endure the drought. The Woolverton, he says, is well worth growing.

Gooseberries.—Mr. A. Morton, of Brampton, reports upon twenty-six varieties of gooseberries, mostly English.

Mr. S. Spillet, Superintendent of the Simcoe gooseberry station, reports upon ten varieties. He speaks highly of the Pearl. He says, "Take it all around as medium sized berry, the pearl is hard to beat. More vigorous and with better foliage than the Downing. It is bound to be generally planted. It yielded this year five quarts to the bushel all around. The Champion, a peer to the Pearl in vigor and foliage, is ahead of it apparently in productiveness and size. The berry is a cross of Downing upon the Rocky Mountain gooseberry, so the originator informs me. It is certainly unlike any other gooseberry I have seen in habit of growth and appearance and shape of berry. In quality, I do not think the fruit equal to the Pearl. I may say that by spraying with liver of sulphur, most of the English varieties may be grown successfully, but, in my opinion, one future berry for general cultivation will be along the line of a cross between the so-called American varieties and the English."

Spraying for Fungi and Insects. That Paris green and kerosene emulsion still remain the leading insecticides, and that Bordeaux mixture is the best remedy for plant diseases, is the experience of the New York station at Geneva. The knapsack sprayer is generally useful, though extensive growers need a machine of greater capacity. The suction pump should always enter the tank at the top, and the pump should be made of brass or be brass lined. Hand pumps should allow the weight of the body to be used on the handle while at work. Vermorel nozzles give a better spray than the disk machines. For spraying potatoes and tomatoes a nozzle is needed which can be lowered between the rows, and directed vines. The agitator is needed to keep the poisons in solution. The best forms work up and down in an upward tank, like a dash in the old churn. Where the pump platform has a packing this should be often renewed. For killing cabbage worms and insects, no liquid has been found equal to dry Paris green applied with a hand sifter. Powder guns are useful for applying dry powdered poisons, pyrethrum, tobacco dust and sulphur. Kambe extensions should be used in spraying large trees.

Whoever would make more better calves than we needed for our own herd. It will not pay.

ROBILLARD HAS RETIRED

CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE IN RUSSELL COUNTY WITHDRAWS.

Ottawa, March 9.—Honorable Robillard, the Conservative candidate in Russell, retired from the contest this morning. Speaking of his retirement, Mr. Robillard stated he accepted the nomination with great reluctance on account of poor health. It was with expectations that his health would improve that he entered the field, but it has not, and he retires now in order to allow the party time to get another candidate in the field. A. B. Fripp, barrister of this city, may now get the nomination.

LIMIT SALMON PACKING

CANNERS AND DEALERS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA FORM A COMBINE.

Vancouver, B. C., March 9.—It has been known for some time that salmon canners along the coast have formed into a combine, but no official announcement was made because some large concerns kept out till the last moment. However, the canners now come out boldly with the statement that they did not welcome last year's record pack, so a strong combination of canners and dealers has been entered into with the object of regulating prices and judiciously limiting the quantity of salmon to be put up this season.

BY JANE SEYMOUR.

"I well remember that first night, spent at Wargrave. I had fallen into a brown study over the smoking-room fire on this particular 13th of February. I had quite forgotten my present surroundings when about midnight my host touched me lightly on the shoulder, and reminded me that he was to show me the famous portrait of Lord Barrymore in the picture gallery through which we would pass on our way to our respective sleeping apartments."

"I instantly arose to follow Mr. Selous. As we entered the gallery, he informed me that the collection of portraits there at that time were principally paintings of his own ancestors, the Selous, and not Barrymore portraits. When we had traversed about half of the gallery, Mr. Selous paused at a spot between the high, narrow stained-glass windows, containing the emblazoned arms of the Barrymore family in the richly colored glass. The surface between the two windows was a plain panel. Peering his hand slowly down the right-hand edge of the panel, Mr. Selous suddenly paused at a certain point where a slight depression in the wood concealed a spring. Pressing his finger against the spring, it yielded, and the panel began to imperceptibly sink. As it disappeared beneath the oak floor on which we were standing, a full-length portrait was revealed to us on an inner panel. The painting was of the identical person I had seen earlier in the evening."

"I stared first at the portrait and then at Mr. Selous."

"Are there any members of the Barrymore family living at the present time?" I enquired.

"One," my host replied; "a very much overworked clergyman of a country parish in Wiltshire."

"I turned to the portrait to examine it more carefully. It was a work of art. The figure was in Court costume of black velvet, and was instinct with life. Time's effacing finger had left no mark on the high-brow beauty of the courtier's face. The nose in the portrait was slightly aquiline. The mouth, somewhat stern, was not sensual, and was beautifully formed. On the broad white forehead, the hair curled in dark rings. The upper lip was short, giving an expression of extreme hauteur to the face, and the eyes large, dark and melancholy, held mine with a sort of fascination. The hands were partly covered with lace ruffles, and though not effeminate were perfectly beautiful, and denoted the highly strung and nervous temperament."

"I was spellbound by this portrait, and stood silently gazing at it until Mr. Selous aroused me by placing one finger on the rapier hilt clasped by one of the hands in the portrait. Suddenly, the second panel containing the portrait began to sink, leaving a long, dark passage open to view."

"At the end of this passage," said Mr. Selous, pointing inward, "is a winding staircase leading to the King's Tower. The Hon. Mrs. Egerton sleeps in one of the apartments on this night. If you make the descent of this staircase, you will eventually find yourself in the crypt of the Barrymores, which lie beneath the chapel. And I advise you not to go down there to-night," he concluded with a smile, "because on the 13th, you might find at least one of the Barrymores wandering about the crypt outside of his coffin, and he would prove a gruesome subject to stumble across in the dark."

"I took my friend's advice; and after watching both panels return slowly to their place on pressure of the two springs, I bade my host good-night, and retired, fully satisfied with my present investigations."

"As I entered my room, candle in hand, the moon's rays were streaming in through a high, narrow window, at which the curtains were still undrawn. Placing my candle on the dressing-table, I walked to the window and looked out. Every feature of the landscape was revealed in the glorious moonlight. To the left I could see a long avenue of dark yew, which I knew to be the approach to the door of the chapel. To the right I could see the winding Thames, sparkling as it flowed in the moonlight. Wintry as was the landscape, it was still beautiful in the moon's rays. Some distant bell slowly tolled the hour as I stood regarding the beauty of the scene and thinking of the portrait and of the strange stories connected with this historical place."

"I left the window at length, and sat down before the fire to muse on some of the inexplicable things of this life."

"I do not know how long I sat musing there."

"Every sound in the house had apparently ceased, when suddenly I heard a low, wailing, blood-chilling cry, so unearthly and despairing in its tone as to prick every nerve in my body and to cause me to bleed to quickly recede from my heart. From whence the cry proceeded I could not tell, and it slowly died away to the last echo. It appeared to be borne on the night wind and to rise perhaps from the crypt beneath the chapel, and to ascend to heaven from the dark yew-tree walk."

"I did not have the repetition of the cry that night, and I shortly afterwards fell asleep."

"At the breakfast-table on the following morning, I was much surprised to hear that Mrs. Egerton was leaving Wargrave that very day. A sudden call to London was the explanation of her departure."

"It was not until some time later that I received a full account of the Hon. Mrs. Egerton's strange experience in the turret chamber at Barrymore House on St. Valentine's Eve in the year 1890."

"She had retired to her apartment after leaving the drawing-room on this particular evening of which I have been speaking, quite free of apprehension of any kind. Our mutual friend the Egyptologist of whom I have spoken, and whom I took to dinner, had just one year before, on St. Valentine's Eve, February the 13th, 1890, occupied the same chamber. Her experiences in the room had remained a secret for the following year. Mrs. Egerton knew absolutely nothing of them until she herself had occupied the chamber for one night. Unquestionably they would have been similar had it not been for the varying temperaments of the two persons."

"What happened to Mrs. Egerton I will relate as briefly as possible."

"After retiring to rest in the huge four-post bed for one time, Mrs. Egerton had lain awake for an hour perhaps, gazing about the room, in which objects were plainly revealed by the moonlight pouring its rays into the apartment through a fine old Gothic window mantled with ivy outside, a few dreary branches of which vine had thrust themselves through the interstices of its framework into the very room itself, and appeared to be dripping moonlight from its exquisitely shaped and polished leaves. From some very ancient tapestry remaining on the walls of the room, shadowy forms seemed to start faintly, revealed by the moonlight, which now and again glinted on two huge old candlesticks adorning either end of the mantelpiece, in which were placed clusters of wax candles. In one corner of this apartment there was a closet, the door of which was locked. Above the chimney-piece was hung the portrait of a beautiful woman, and over the picture were suspended and crossed two rapier having jewelled hilts. This apartment had been occupied by Lord Barrymore during his lifetime. On the ceiling of the room were stretched several huge tiger skins, which had lain there for a century or more."

From some very ancient tapestry remaining on the walls of the room, shadowy forms seemed to start faintly, revealed by the moonlight, which now and again glinted on two huge old candlesticks adorning either end of the mantelpiece, in which were placed clusters of wax candles. In one corner of this apartment there was a closet, the door of which was locked. Above the chimney-piece was hung the portrait of a beautiful woman, and over the picture were suspended and crossed two rapier having jewelled hilts. This apartment had been occupied by Lord Barrymore during his lifetime. On the ceiling of the room were stretched several huge tiger skins, which had lain there for a century or more."

"I did not have the repetition of the cry that night, and I shortly afterwards fell asleep."

"At the breakfast-table on the following morning, I was much surprised to hear that Mrs. Egerton was leaving Wargrave that very day. A sudden call to London was the explanation of her departure."

"It was not until some time later that I received a full account of the Hon. Mrs. Egerton's strange experience in the turret chamber at Barrymore House on St. Valentine's Eve in the year 1890."

"She had retired to her apartment after leaving the drawing-room on this particular evening of which I have been speaking, quite free of apprehension of any kind. Our mutual friend the Egyptologist of whom I have spoken, and whom I took to dinner, had just one year before, on St. Valentine's Eve, February the 13th, 1890, occupied the same chamber. Her experiences in the room had remained a secret for the following year. Mrs. Egerton knew absolutely nothing of them until she herself had occupied the chamber for one night. Unquestionably they would have been similar had it not been for the varying temperaments of the two persons."

"What happened to Mrs. Egerton I will relate as briefly as possible."

"After retiring to rest in the huge four-post bed for one time, Mrs. Egerton had lain awake for an hour perhaps, gazing about the room, in which objects were plainly revealed by the moonlight pouring its rays into the apartment through a fine old Gothic window mantled with ivy outside, a few dreary branches of which vine had thrust themselves through the interstices of its framework into the very room itself, and appeared to be dripping moonlight from its exquisitely shaped and polished leaves. From some very ancient tapestry remaining on the walls of the room, shadowy forms seemed to start faintly, revealed by the moonlight, which now and again glinted on two huge old candlesticks adorning either end of the mantelpiece, in which were placed clusters of wax candles. READ WHAT PHYSICIANS SAY OF POND'S EXTRACT

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 29, 1894.
I have used "Pond's Extract" for many years and always insist upon my patients getting "Pond's," not the ordinary Extract, which is often a very poor article. W. K. BROWN, M. D.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 9, 1895.
I use Pond's Extract a great deal in my practice. I think it very valuable in all venous enlargements. J. L. BRADFORD, M. D.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., Nov. 27, 1894.
I have been using Pond's Extract in my practice for twenty years. I frequently have the experience you mention of drug-gists insisting they can put up as good as yours. I don't believe it. I use Pond's Extract a great deal as an antiseptic in combination with glycerine and carbolic acid. I think it far superior to any antiseptic known. F. G. FLOURNOY, M. D.

COLUMBIA, PA., Jan. 18, 1895.
I have been a constant user of Pond's Extract since 1852, and do not expect to discontinue it while I live. S. ARMOR, M. D.

CHELSEA, MASS., Nov. 8, 1894.
I have made diseases of the skin a specialty for thirty years, and am free to say I know of no remedy that has given me such perfect satisfaction as Pond's Extract in cases for which it is recommended. G. W. BABCOCK, M. D.

ASTHMA'S INSTITUTE, Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 8, 1894.
I know Pond's Extract to be a valuable remedy, and shall continue its use whenever the opportunity offers. GEO. H. CALKINS, M. D.

I am pleased with the purity and strength of Pond's Extract. J. L. DURYEE, M. D.

THE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY

A Spring Show of Stallions to Take Place Next Month

Resignation of a Director—Mr. Garbutt to Fill the Vacancy—The Date of the Annual Exhibition

The first meeting of the new board of the West Peterborough Agricultural Society was held in the Council Chamber yesterday afternoon, when Mr. Geo. W. Fitzgerald, President, was in the chair. Other directors present were Messrs. Thos. Hunter, Vice-President, Rightmeyer, John Stoddart, Geo. Bennett, Wm. Telford, Dawson Kennedy, Robert Vance, James Baple and W. J. Green, Secretary.

Mr. Telford tendered his resignation as a director of the board, and it was accepted. On the proposition of Mr. Vance, seconded by Mr. Stoddart, Mr. J. H. Garbutt was unanimously chosen to fill the vacancy.

It was decided to hold a spring show of stallions in the market square on Saturday, April 30th.

The board fixed Thursday and Friday, September 29 and 30, and Saturday, October 1, for the holding of the annual exhibition.

The meeting stood adjourned until Wednesday, March 30, when the revision of the list will be undertaken.

A NARROW ESCAPE

A Little Child Struck by the Lakefield Local Train

Gordon, Bennett, nearly three years old, the child of Mrs. Bennett, widow of 200 Edinburgh street, Peterborough, had a wonderful escape from death yesterday morning. At about half-past 11 o'clock he was playing near his home on Edinburgh street with some other children. Noticing the Lakefield local train backing down the track, he started to cross the tracks towards his mother's house. The driver, seeing his movements immediately reversed the brake and tried to warn the child back. Owing to the down grade at the crossing, and as the distance was very short, the train could not pull up at once; and just as the child had reached the rear car and knocked under it, and the train, consisting of three cars and engine, passed over him. Mrs. Hart, a neighbor, who had seen the accident, ran soon on the spot. Marvellous to relate, and greatly to the lady's astonishment, the child was alive. She picked him up, and he was afterwards taken to the hospital.

Upon examination of the wounds at the hospital, it was found that there were three severe cuts on the boy's head, and bruises on some parts of the body. No bones were broken. Chloroform was administered, the wounds were dressed, and the child was then put to bed.

Dr. Fife informed our representative last evening that the injuries were not likely to prove fatal and that the child was doing as well as could be expected.

THE SPRING ASSIZES

The Business Brought to a Conclusion Yesterday

Before Mr. Justice Ferguson, the business of the Spring Assizes was concluded yesterday. One of the cases on the docket was settled out of court. It was that of Rogers vs. Rodden, in which the plaintiff, a butcher, charged the defendant, also a butcher, with maliciously injuring the business of the plaintiff by spreading certain rumors alleging that the plaintiff killed and took to his shop a bull infected with cancer, and in which plaintiff claimed $1,000 damages. Mr. Geo. J. Sherry was for plaintiff; Mr. W. A. F. Campbell for defendant.

Hall versus McPherson and Proctor.—This was a case brought by Adam Jeffrey Hall, against Alfred J. McPherson and Wm. Proctor. The statement of claim alleged that the defendant and others under the name of the Ray of Quinte Hedge Company, did make certain misrepresentation regarding their assets, thereby inducing the plaintiff to take stock in their company, whereby he did incur certain losses. Plaintiff sued for $500 damages. Stratton & Hall, of town, and S. Blake, O. C., for plaintiff; McPherson & Davidson for defendants. The case was dismissed, both parties consenting, on the understanding that an answer would be taken to the Division Court.

The last case on the list was that of Brishois versus Corry and Lavender. Mr. D. O'Connell represented the plaintiff, and Mr. W. H. Moore appeared for the defence. The action was one brought by C. Brishois, contractor, against Corry and Lavender, alleging that the defendants had unlawfully prevent the fulfillment of a contract they had entered into with the plaintiff for 5,000 yards of gravel. It was alleged also that the plaintiff unlawfully held $39 of money due defendant. Suit brought for $309 damages for alleged refusal to fulfil agreement, $38.60 for unlawful prevention and $39 balance claimed.

Judgment was given for plaintiff for $21.60 damages and $39.90 for debt. Costs were awarded plaintiff on the Division Court scale only, with a set-off of High Court costs in favor of the defendants.

THE NEW MARKET BY-LAW

There Will be Alterations in the Scale of Charges

The Ontario statutes having rendered necessary alterations in the market by-law, the town solicitor has drawn up the following revised scale of charges:

Upon articles brought to the market place in a vehicle drawn by two horses on which fees may be imposed, except wood or wheat, 8 1/2

Vehicle drawn by one horse, 5 1/2

Each load of wood, 5 1/2

Basket or vessel, 5 1/2

Every horse, mare or gelding, 10 1/2

Every head of cattle, 5 1/2

Every live calf or pig, 5 1/2

Each new carriage or buggy, 5 1/2

Each second-hand vehicle, 2 1/2

Each new threshing machine or self-binder, 5 1/2

Each second-hand machine of above description, 1 1/2

Each machine worked by hand, 50 1/2

Each stand table, other than butchers', 5 1/2

Each article not covered by the foregoing, 25 1/2

For each lot of goods offered for sale by auction in addition to the fees payable as aforesaid, 25 1/2

As there is some complaint as to articles being sold on the market under weight, it is proposed to make the members of the police force inspectors to prevent the sale of short goods and also prevent forestalling on the market and the obstruction of the square or any of the approaches thereto.

The fee upon new machinery, buggies, sleighs, etc., has been placed at a high figure to prevent outsiders bringing in these articles at the busy seasons and selling them by auction upon the market, thus competing with the local dealers who in many cases are large tax-payers. It was felt to be a grievance that these outside marketeers could at only a trifling cost have their articles sold upon the market which the local dealers are paying taxes to support.

The new by-law will be considered before the Council in committee.

Mr. Ramsay's Entertainment

It was unfortunate that Mr. W. E. Ramsay, the clever entertainer, was not patronized last evening as he should have been on the occasion of the first-class treat provided by him under the auspices of the Lacrosse club. It is no exaggeration to say that the show was delightfully interesting and interestingly delightful. The moving pictures were a marked success, and the songs and character sketches exhibited in a marked degree. Mr. Ramsay's ability and versatility as an entertainer, we heartily recommend our readers to take advantage of the opportunity offered by the repetition of the entertainment the afternoon and evening and last, Mr. Ramsay's quality. At the matinee the charges are only 5c for children and 10c for adults.

To the Ladies

Mr. R. H. Kells attended the great sale of dry goods and clothing of the stock of the Army and Navy store in Toronto, which is in liquidation, last week, and purchased a large quantity of black crepons. These goods are perfectly new and were purchased at a very low price. Mr. Kells is ever alert in securing bargains for his many customers and these goods are now on sale in his store, and are genuine bargains.

—The third lecture in the special historical course at St. John's was delivered last evening by Rev. W. E. Cooper, B.D., of Campbellford, on "The Conquest of Canada—Constantine and the Nineteenth Age." The lecture was preceded by a shortened form of even-song.

—There will be a special meeting of the Board of Trade in the Council Chamber to-night for the purpose of passing such resolutions as will strengthen the hands of the Dominion Government in their firm stand as regards the action of the United States Government respecting free navigation privileges of the St. Lawrence River under the Treaty of Washington.

—Yesterday's Toronto World contained a cartoon entitled, "Why Jimmie may not be 'took'." In which Mr. J. R. Stratton is depicted sitting in a chair in Mr. Hardy's photographic studio. Written on a sheet of newspaper near a portfolio are the words, "I want to be a statesman." Photographer Hardy, who is represented with "negative returns" in his hand, says: "It's little Jimmie Stratton who is posing for a 'cabinet,' but the 'developments' haven't been satisfactory lately. I've got to quit, and let him Whitely be likely to lose the work at any moment."

—Mr. John Small, of Moncton, N. W. T., who has been the guest of Mr. Geo. Young, North Monaghan, for some time, has returned to the Northwest. Mr. Small has been in Ontario nearly three months on his present trip, and has visited a number of old friends in that time, being a former resident of the vicinity. He prefers Moncton to any other portion of the country for farming purposes, and has now been living there fourteen years having no wheat frosted in twelve seasons. He advises his friends who contemplate moving west to follow Moncton as a trial, as for wheat-growing it cannot be equalled in the territories.

A New Prospect

Returning Klondikers say that the disease which has been killing so many people in Skagway and Dyea affects the spine and is fatal in a few hours. Deaths are kept secret as far as possible, and when enquiries are made for a missing man, the answer is: "He must have gone up the trail." Henry Marshall, who has arrived at Victoria, B.C., from Skagway, says: "A healthy person will feel slight chills suddenly ascend his spinal column to the brain, and in a few hours the back of the neck becomes stiff and cold, the head is forced back, the brain then becomes clouded and soon reason gives way. Black spots appear all over the body, and in a few hours death relieves the sufferer of all pain. A hundred dollars a day would not tempt me again to enter this 'charnel house.'"

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 11, 1898

ENGLAND'S PREMIER

It would not be strange if Lord Salisbury at the age of 67 were physically upset by strain of his imperial responsibilities, strain almost unequalled in the history of British premiers. Within a few months, almost, Britain has been on the verge of war with the four other most powerful nations on the earth—Germany, Russia, France, the United States—recently with Russia and France combined. No man holding in his hand like Salisbury peace or war for hundreds of millions of people—stating perhaps the very existence of the British empire in his game—could feel easy in mind of late, no matter how strong he were.

A curious uncertainty seems to exist outside of England as to Lord Salisbury's calibre. On this continent the doubt is fostered by energetic correspondents of New York papers, who frequently can not understand why Lord Salisbury does not see how to run the empire as clearly as they do. Mr. Goldwin Smith, too, who never made a political prophecy that did not turn out wrong, and is accustomed never to lose a hope where the result afterwards proves easy success, is constantly quoting Bismarck's alleged taunt at the time of the Berlin congress that Salisbury was a "half-painted to resemble iron." Disraeli said Salisbury at that congress proved too much for Bismarck, who might naturally feel like making nasty remarks. If the British empire to-day were ruled by a man such, one might well shiver for British interests. Yet if Salisbury were a man, he could not dictate the British course—there are too many strong men around him. It is common sense to argue that if Salisbury were not a very exceptional force, he could not have gained nor could keep the towering position he holds in British politics. It is thirty-three years since he became first a cabinet minister—rising to that eminence within twelve years of entering Parliament. For eighteen years, since Disraeli's death, he has led the Conservative party in Britain. It is thirteen years since he entered on his first term as prime minister, and he has been prime minister thrice. During this long term in politics a galaxy of great men have surrounded him, but his light has not dimmed. Always gaining, rarely losing, he came to the front among such statesmen as Disraeli, Gladstone, Argyll, Derby, Dilke, Goschen and Parnell, and has stayed at the top among men like Chamberlain, Rombery, Balfour, John Morley, Lord Hartington (the Duke of Devonshire that is), Hicks Beach, Vernon Harcourt, Lansdowne. Does such a career indicate an ordinary calibre of man? The fact pointed to resemble iron may be nickel-steel. That Britain has ever lost anything in Salisbury's care is not observable, but on the contrary her dignity and her interests have been equally well maintained. Those who are out among the audience in the international theatre have much reason to feel that what Lord Salisbury is doing behind this scenes will not cause Britain to play a poor part on the stage.

Mr. McNish, of West-Elgin, is not yet of age. At any rate, he has not attained his majority.

Weather prophets, who are equally as numerous and as reliable as political forecasters, are advising us of the advent of the March lion.

There are quite a few M.P.'s in a state of suspended animation. When the election judges have had their say, they will then know whether it is to be the "swing of victory" or of defeat.

The newspapers tell us that Dreyfus has to sleep on a plank bed. They do not add that his beard is plain, too, but the inference is that it is, and that it is a "beard" plainer than Zola's is.

The March wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but cannot tell whose cheek it will make brown. Wherefore, beautiful complexions will be hidden from our vision by the veil.

Great Britain is a nation of ship-keepers as well as a nation of shop-keepers. The former characteristic is an important factor in the world to-day. Spain would esteem the loan of a few of the ships just now.

"No seat, no fare" is the cry of the Toronto News is raising against the Toronto Street Railway. This is the very opposite to the cry raised by Mr. Haycock. When he heard the returns from Frontenac, he cried "No seat! Full fare!"

"The recollection of the past is unprofitable; let us look to the future." This is the motto of those newspapers who prophesied before they knew. With them, the resurrection of dead bones is unprofitable as well as unprofitable.

There are anxious enquiries again after the health of the Sick Man of China. What has become of that other distinguished invalid, the Sick Man of Turkey, who was recently in a state of collapse and almost ready for the European dissecting knife?

We hear that a newspaper editor, who is quite a wag in his own little way, has invited tenders for a sack of flour, one pair of pants and a hat. He says that is the way merchants do business with him when they want a dollar's worth of job printing.

The yellow journals continue to talk tall things about war with Spain. Well, well; where is the fight to be? Neither country has a navy worth speaking of. We think both sides had better blow up their navy and scrap (like the Toronto Globe and Mail) over who has "won the victory." We think the Yankees would make more out of a war on paper than on the ocean.

In the hope of keeping the Hon. J. M. Gibson out of politics, a section of the Tory press is advocating his appointment to a judgeship and saying prettier things about him than it did just before the general election. This is a funny world. A fortnight ago Mr. Gibson's public acts were denounced as disgracefully corrupt and venal. But to-day we are told that the defeated Minister of Crown Lands has lived an honorable life, that he has the personal esteem and friendship of those who are his most active political opponents, and that he is in every respect qualified to adorn the bench. Strike the balance between the two extremes, and perhaps a true estimate of Mr. Gibson's character and attainments will be arrived at.

KEENE LIME-JUICE CLUB

A special meeting of the Lime Juice Club was held on Saturday night last. All the members were present with the exception of Bruin Spier, who has not yet recovered from the effects of election fever. President Decackey sent him a bottle of soothing syrup, which no doubt will help to strengthen his nerves. At precisely seven o'clock Decackey called the meeting to order. After indulging in a chew of tobacco and arranging his pet whisker and mouseta-be rose, and addressed the members as follows: Brethren, I cannot but admire you as you sit before me to-night. Your very countenances are proof enough that you are intelligent and honest, and I therefore not only admire you, but also put the most implicit confidence in each of you, and don't you forget it. It is my intention to-night to convince you that it is time we had a change in our club, and when I explain to you my reasons for so speaking to you I feel assured that you will agree with me. Now, to make a long story short, I will tell you at once that it is my desire that ladies be admitted into this club as members. Just think of the advantages that it will be to all of us. It will be so nice to address them as sisters, and don't you forget it. They are more witty than us men, and think of it, you will not only have the privilege but the honor of escorting your sister home from the club, and if you don't happen to have a sister of your own you can take some other fellow's sister home, and don't you forget it. I want all who are in favor of having ladies admitted into the Keene Lime Juice Club as members to stand up. All stood up but Methody Comrie. Decackey, with a very demure countenance, asked Methody to give his reasons for objections to the ladies. Methody now rose to his feet and said: "I have nothing bad to say about women, but I have my own opinion about admitting them into the club. Why the idea is preposterous. Just imagine for a moment the absurdity of you escorting a girl home from this club. The ladies now become very wrathful, and ordered Methody to take his seat. Methody informed him that he would change his mind before he would comply with his foolish wishes. Decackey struck at Methody, and in mistake gave Scott McFee a stunner on the ear. Scott now took a chair and Decackey in a rage hit him and struck Minney Whale Jones. Minney Whale blew out all the lights and called for a constable. Peace was at once restored, and Decackey ordered the lamps to be lit, which was done in short order. Decackey now informed the members that it was settled that ladies be admitted into this club, and he would now appoint Nicky Wier, Ponty Mack, Rinker Jack and Bain Soule as a committee to advise and induce all amiable and nice girls to join the club. I also appoint Lightfoot Oront and Cautious Miller to go to Montreal to purchase suitable chairs for the ladies to sit on. And, lastly, I appoint Shat Taylor, Bismark Miller, Pomy Moore and Boot Lelanga as a room committee; their duties to sweep, scrub, clean lamps and make the room comfortable and attractive. As it is time to close I now ask Duke Renwick and Sandy Patterson to sing the closing ode. Decackey now declared the club closed until next Saturday night.

THE FEMININE OBSERVER

Cream white note paper is once again in vogue, in fact it is in too good taste always to be ever actually abandoned.

In noting the way a child is groomed you can form an estimate of the sort of meals and the style of house furnishing in the home presided over by its mother.

A man is never so exasperating as when he asks a woman for a detailed account of her day's doings and then reads the paper while she is trying to give it to him.

The so-called theatre-hat of '98 is simply bristling with upright bows every bit as exasperating as any nodding plume that ever drove a man to drink between the acts.

After a woman reaches the 30-mark she is delighted when anyone tells her she looks younger than she really is, even if she knows the giver of the compliment is an awfully poor judge of ages.

X, THEN BRAIN RAYS.

PROF. CROOKES' WONDERFUL THEORY OF THOUGHT TRANSFERENCE.

The Great Scientist's Latest Speculations and the Vast Amount of Attention They Are Receiving—Something of His Line of Logic and Argument.

Prof. Crookes' new application of the wave theory is attracting a vast amount of attention in certain quarters, says the London correspondent of The New York Sun. The conception of brain waves which he puts forward is a bold one, but he justifies it with one of the most fascinating, if fanciful, arguments ever advanced in the cold, unimaginative name of science. The suggestion is, in brief, that thought, intelligence, may be transmitted from one sensitive being to another, without regard to distance of intervening matter, by means of inconceivably minute and rapid electric vibrations, the strain which Prof. Crookes puts upon ignorant human credulity by the mere statement of such a proposition is severe enough, but it is mitigated somewhat by the gentle process which precedes his stunning announcement. He begins by free our minds from all preconceived assumptions and prejudices which, he rightly declares, are greater obstacles to the growth of knowledge than mere ignorance. He tells us in many words that we do not know as much about nature and the universe as we think we do.

He illustrates and emphasizes this humbling suggestion by means of a couple of parables. Imagine, he says, a tiny being of the microscopic size of Small It's "Atom"—so small that the molecular forces, of which we in ordinary life make no account, such as surface tension, capillary attraction, the cohesion of liquids, etc., would be conscious of it could hardly believe in the existence of, for instance, the law of gravitation. Prof. Crookes puts his imaginary being in a cabbage leaf and speculates as to what would be the illiputian philosopher's conception of the shape of the world, the laws of nature and the scheme of the universe. The motor of the sun would be to him "cumbersome objects like portmanteaus flying through the air." He would be terrified by the thinnest insects. Motions and sounds unknown to us would be commonplaces to him. The knowledge available to him in the physical world would be perhaps as vast as that which we possess and as genuine as far as it went.

The Professor goes on to suppose that his tiny student, endowed with all the mental capacity of man, collects his information into a great scheme of the universe from the point of view of a cabbage leaf. Then he proceeds to contrast the result of this method of a similar investigation made by another imaginary organism as vast in its proportions as the cabbage leaf philosopher was small. Having dwelt on the interesting contrast with a most ingenious play of fancy, the Professor proceeds to ask the inevitable question: If such changes in our elementary ideas would come to pass from a mere difference in size, may not all our so-called knowledge be limited by our accidental environment?

Having thus cleared the way for his invasion from the domain of physics into the region usually regarded as that of metaphysics, Prof. Crookes discloses his wave-law theory. It is an extension of the well-known natural law under which sounds is conveyed by vibrations of the atmosphere and light by the vibrations of the thinner ether. He presents an interesting calculation of the number or rapidity of these vibrations. Starting first with one pendulum beat or vibration a second and increasing to two, then to four, then to eight, and on in geometrical progression, he carries the calculation on to the sixty-third step, where the number of vibrations a second are expressed by a number containing nineteen figures. At the fifth step, where the vibrations are thirty-two a second, we enter the region where sound begins for the average human ear. With the fifth step is reached a point at which for the average human ear sound ends. From the sixteenth to the thirtieth step is attained a region of a highly attenuated medium with far more rapid vibrations revealing themselves as electrical rays.

Higher up the scale from the thirtieth to the forty-fifth step, a realm which is at present unexplored, but in which Prof. Crookes thinks may lie the explanation of much now wholly mysterious. Still rising in the scale with vibrations of prodigious rapidity, comes the region of light; and beyond that lies another unknown region, as to which Mr. Crookes hazards the conjecture that "it is not unlikely that the X rays of Prof. Röntgen will be found to lie between the fifty-eighth and the sixty-first step."

Of the operations performed within two of these regions little is known; and ascending still higher in the scale, "it does not require much stretch of the scientific imagination to conceive that at the sixty-second or sixty-third step the tramels from which rays at the sixty-first step were struggling to free themselves have ceased to influence, etc., and that these rays, where the densest medium with no diminution of intensity, and pass unreflected and unreflected along their straight path with the velocity of light." Soaring still higher on the wings of "scientific imagination," he assumes orders of vibrations still finer, waves of ether ceasing to have the properties of those known to us and overcoming all obstacles caused by distances or intervening matter.

Dropping the stricter processes of logic, Prof. Crookes then suggests in a more tentative way: May not these rays enable intelligence to be transmitted from one sensitive being to another? May not their radius of action be practically limitless? "It is inconceivable that intense thought concentrated toward a sensitive being with whom the thinker is in close sympathy may induce a telephonic chain, along which brain waves can go straight to their goal without loss of energy due to distance."

No man of science has contributed anything to recent discussion of scientific subjects which will appeal more plausibly and more entertainingly to the popular imagination than the paper which I have briefly described. Prof. Crookes occupies so distinguished a position in the scientific world that he is entitled to serious consideration even when he indulges in flights of fancy such as this discussion is, or, at least, of its conclusions. His logic is strong, apparently, even to the point where he assigns the still mysterious X rays to their place in nature's scheme. To say that they lie on the borderland, only a step removed from the domain of telepathy and all those strange phenomena whose very existence is still virtually unrecognized is a startling suggestion. It would be better, perhaps, as The Times suggests, if Prof. Crookes, before explaining the facts of telepathy, would make it perfectly clear that they exist.

Sensitive. Golden—in the winter of 1896 there were five feet of snow.

AN ACTOR'S SUICIDE

FATHER OF ADDISON PITT, OF THE CUMMINGS STOCK COMPANY, IS DEAD.

Henry M. Pitt, of New York, father of Addison Pitt, of the Cummings Stock Company has committed suicide in New York by drinking carbolic acid, the motive being despondency. He was 55 years old and came to America about 20 years ago from England, where he was born. He played in many of the productions at Wallack's old theatre, at Broadway and Thirteenth street, first appearing in "As You Like It," and later in "The World," and other similar melodramas. He later played in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," at the Boston Museum and took the leading role in "The Raja," creating the title part. For a number of years he was a member of various Frohman companies, his last important engagement with Charles Frohman being in "Thoroughbred," in which he appeared at the Grand Opera House in this city, a year ago last September. His exquisite performance of a refined old nobleman was by long odds the best feature of the play. His wife, Fanny Addison Pitt, with whom he lived most happily, was a favorite here in the companies of E. H. Sothern and So. Smith Russell. She played Mrs. Malaprop in the latter's production of "The Rivals." In addition to his sons, C. B. Pitt and Addison Pitt, the deceased left a daughter, who recently appeared at the Toronto Opera House.

THE WOMAN TEMPTED HIM

A MARRIED MAN WAS OFF WITH A TILSONBURG GIRL.

Windsor, Ont., March 9.—Thomas White, a robust Englishman of 29, entered the home of James Navila, in Tilsonburg, six weeks ago as a boarder. There he met Navila's daughter Flora, and they loved. Yesterday Flora picked up her belongings in Thomas' trunk and both left Tilsonburg on a Canadian Pacific train for Windsor. Chief of Police Willis received a telegram informing him of the elopement, and this morning the young lovers were a police pair. They were found in a room in Moodie's boarding-house on Pitts street at an early hour by Officers Reid and Livingston. At noon Flora was on her way back to Tilsonburg in charge of her mother, while Thomas languished in a cell in Windsor gaol weeping and blaming Flora for the whole thing. White has a wife and five children living in England, and left them about four months ago to come to Canada. He was for awhile in Chatham, and from there went to Tilsonburg. It was a case of love at first sight on the part of both he says. Flora, according to his story, begged of him to take her away and marry, knowing that her parents would not consent to the union. They came to Windsor, but when Thomas was confronted with the fact that marriage meant bigamy he weakened, and succeeded in winning Flora's consent to a postponement of the nuptials.

AN IMMENSE FLOUR DEAL

THE CANADIAN LUMBER KING'S LATEST MONEY-MAKING SCHEME

Ottawa, March 9.—A flour mill, eclipsing anything of a similar nature in Canada, both in size and capacity, is to be erected by J. E. Booth, the Canadian lumber king, at the Chaudiere on the site of his large lumber mills which were destroyed by fire about two years ago. The building will be six stories in height, covering an entire block, and will have a capacity of 300 barrels of flour per day. Mr. Booth with his wonderful business alertness has obtained and sold to new settlers two strips of land, each two miles wide, bordering on each side of the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway from Barry's Bay to the eastern boundary of Algonquin Park. He will be paid for the land not in cash but in grain. This will give an unlimited supply of grain for his mill.

WARGRAVE

BY JANE SEYMOUR.

Written for The Times.
"As Mrs. Egerton lay quietly contemplating these various objects in the clear moonlight, she began at length to experience a vague feeling of nameless dread which gradually took entire possession of her mind, although she struggled violently against its doing so. She arose, in every way to reason herself out of such an unaccountable sensation, closing her eyes at length with the determination to gaze no longer at objects in the misleading moonlight."

"For fully fifteen minutes she lay without undressing her eyes, and then she heard distinctly a sigh at her bedside."

"Opening her eyes now in undoubted fright, she saw a shadowy figure standing in the flood of moonlight a few paces away and wringing its hands in apparent agony of mind."

"With a shriek of terror, she sprang from her couch, when she was transfixed by a sudden and mysterious change in the form and its contents. Sinking back again upon the bed, she was quite unable to move from excessive surprise."

"The room had been transformed as by a miracle. The faded colors of the tapestry had been replaced by the glowing tones of its pristine beauty. The room was brilliantly alight with wax tapers in massive silver sconces and candelabra. The apartment was unquestionably that of a gentleman. Articles of Court attire were scattered carelessly about the room. On the dressing-table lay countless objects of toilette, no longer used by either fop or fair lady. A strange and enervating but delicate odor seemed to pervade the place."

"They passed slowly down the centre of the room with fingers on lip, turning silently as the door unlocked again and a tall, dark priest of distinguished appearance entered. Without a sound, these ladies beckoned to the priest to approach the closed door. As he reached the place where they stood, they took him each one by the hand and led him into the closet, the door of which had unaccountably opened. He passed them and opened a door, and they closed and locked the door after him."

"As they were locking the closet door, Mrs. Egerton saw another figure advance quickly from the array. It was that of a gentleman in Court dress, which costume remained much the same in all periods. As it glided past the bed on which Mrs. Egerton lay, she saw that the face and figure exactly corresponded with the famous portrait of Lord Barrymore in the picture gallery. Pausing in front of the mantelpiece, it rapidly disengaged one of the foils hanging above the portrait, and, removing the button from the rapier, as quick as thought proceeded towards the ladies, whose backs were turned."

"With a violent effort, Mrs. Egerton now sprang from the bed, and, fainting as her feet touched the floor, how long she remained in this condition she never knew. But the last thing of which she was conscious before she swooned was a long, low, piercing cry, heart-breaking in its bitterness."

"On recovering from this swoon, she found herself lying on the floor by her bedside. The room had resumed its original appearance, as the cold, pale moonlight revealed. Nothing remained of the strange transformation that it had undergone, and nothing could be heard save the night wind sighing outside the casement and sighing the ivy."

"On the following day, as I have previously said, Mrs. Egerton left Wargrave, explaining to her host that she felt strangely ill and must consult her London physician."

"A few days after Mrs. Egerton's departure, I was fortunate enough one rainy morning to find my friend the Egyptologist in the library. She was alone and sitting beside an orderly pile of books which a servant by her direction had placed conveniently within reach near to her hand. The library at Barrymore House was a place of perpetual pleasure to one of a literary turn of mind. The room was octagonal in shape, and the walls from floor to ceiling were lined with shelves stored with one of the most valuable collections of books in the United Kingdom."

"First, apologizing for my interruption of her work, I asked my friend's permission to chat with her for half an hour's time, which favor she was kind enough to readily grant."

"I immediately plunged into the subject of the strange house in which we were staying. At my request, the lady related to me Mrs. Egerton's experience of the night which she had but a few days before undergone in the former apartment of Lord Barrymore, afterward adding her own individual sensation felt while staying in the same room on the night of the 13th of February the previous year."

"Both Mrs. Egerton and my nameless friend had a precisely similar experience in point of sensation in this apartment, which, occupied by Lord Barrymore nearly a hundred years before, remained, as far as its appointments of furniture, etc., were concerned, in exactly the condition it was in when used by his lordship. They both experienced the same feeling of awful dread. My Egyptian friend, however, fought the sensation so determinedly as to conquer it, and the consequence was that she saw nothing unusual in the room, no appearance of any kind, after occupying and sleeping in it for several weeks."

"The history of the room and its former occupant is briefly on this wise: The 13th of February, 18—, was the date of Lord Barrymore's death. In a fit of jealous frenzy, he had killed the woman he loved and her sister in this same apartment, afterwards running himself."

"The lady to whom he was betrothed at the time was a celebrated beauty of the French Court whom he had persuaded with her sister to visit his estate and remain as a guest at Barrymore House. Lord Barrymore more than once had been received at the French Court on affairs of diplomacy, and it was there he met this lady, won her affection, and was formally betrothed to her. Being a devout Catholic, the lady had harbored on the night of this fatal 13th of February a Roman ecclesiastic, her confessor—who had fled to England for refuge, having been banished from France through political intrigue in which he had become involved—on Lord Barrymore's estate. The enemies of the priest had pursued him to the very doors of Barrymore House, where he was given shelter for the night. On that particular night Lord Barrymore was entertaining the Regent, and of course he did not at all an unusual thing for him to do. Entering by some chance his own apartment late in the evening he had been surprised behind the arras by the strange vision that met his eyes—that of his own betrothed in the very act of poisoning an unknown person in his, Lord Barrymore's own apartment—a perfectly inexplicable proceeding to him. Maddened by jealousy and suspicion, and perhaps inflamed by wine, he had rushed upon his victims without warning, and afterwards overcome by grief and remorse had taken his own life in desperation and despair. And to add to the horrors of the tragedy, the priest remained undiscovered in the closet of this room, where he eventually died of starvation."

Liver Trouble

When the yellow flag of quarantine is hoisted over a dwelling it means disease and danger. So when the yellow flag flies in the face—when the cheek is sallow and the clear white of the eye is dyed saffron—there is danger. It is liver trouble. The liver is one of the most important organs of the body. On the proper discharge of its functions depend human health and happiness. When the liver fails of its duty, poisons at once begin to generate, and other organs of the body become involved. Never neglect the liver if you value health. If you are suffering from liver trouble, begin at once the use of AYER'S PILLS and you will find prompt relief and permanent cure.

"I was so weakened by liver trouble that I could scarcely lift my head. While in this condition I began the use of Ayer's Pills, and finding almost immediate benefit, continued their use until I was cured of my complaint."

H. E. W. BENTLEY, Townier, N. D.

Take No Chances With Your Liver
AYER'S PILLS

As St. Maur drew his narrative to a close, and we parted for the night after a few comments on this strange and true tale—for there is a Barrymore House, and Lord Barrymore truly lived. His lordship was precisely the sort of man described, and he frequently entertained the Regent, afterwards George IV., exactly as related. Barrymore House is the finest country residence of the kind on the Thames to-day. The Selous family have in the past few years let it, for the season, to various persons, they themselves occupying another nearby residence. The place, notwithstanding the strange reputation it has, rents easily on account of its beauty and charming environment. (Conclusion.)

READ WHAT PHYSICIANS SAY OF POND'S EXTRACT

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 29, 1894. I have used "Pond's Extract" for many years and always insist upon my patients getting "Pond's," not the ordinary Extract, which is often a very poor article. W. K. BROWN, M. D.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 9, 1895. I use Pond's Extract a great deal in my practice. I think it very valuable in all venous enlargements. J. L. BRADFORD, M. D.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., Nov. 27, 1894. I have been using Pond's Extract in my practice for twenty years. I frequently have the experience you mention of druggists insisting they can put up as good as yours. I don't believe it. I use Pond's Extract a great deal as an antiseptic in combination with glycerine and carbolic acid. I think it far superior to any antiseptic known. F. G. FLOURNOY, M. D.

COLUMBIA, PA., Jan. 18, 1895. I have been a constant user of Pond's Extract since 1852, and do not expect to discontinue it while I live. S. ARMOR, M. D.

CHELSEA, MASS., Nov. 8, 1894. I have made diseases of the skin a specialty for thirty years, and am free to say I know of no remedy that has given me such perfect satisfaction as Pond's Extract in cases for which it is recommended. G. W. BABCOCK, M. D.

ASTHMA'S INSTITUTE, Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 8, 1894. I know Pond's Extract to be a valuable remedy, and shall continue its use whenever the opportunity offers. GEO. H. CALKINS, M. D.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 13, 1894. I am pleased with the purity and strength of Pond's Extract. J. L. DURYEE, M. D.

POND'S EXTRACT is used by the leading physicians and principal hospitals of America and Europe.

—At the fourth annual meeting of the Lindsay Curling Club, Limited, a dividend of five per cent. was declared. Mr. Hopkins, the secretary, and all concerned are to be congratulated upon the prosperous state of the institution.

—A repulsive freak of nature was exhibited in our office last week—a creature given birth to by a ewe belonging to Mr. W. A. Thompson, of Cranberry. Its body was that of a pig, the legs those of a horse, and the feet those of a cow, while the head, without eyes or ears, was like that of an elephant. Our veterinary surgeon, Mr. Ayles, intends having the animal pickled—Colborne Express.

—We congratulate Mr. Walter J. Fergusson upon his appointment as Signal Officer of the American Canoe Association. Mr. English was elected Assistant Officer at the last general meeting of the A.C.A., and in part owes his promotion to the fact that Signal Officer Harry Stewart, of Rochester, has gone to the Klondike. Mr. R. N. Cutler, of Worcester, Mass., has been appointed Assistant Signal Officer.

Mineral Riches in the East

Our old friend Mr. J. L. Auger, the veteran mineralogist of Blairton, sent to this office a few days ago a piece of choice gold-bearing quartz from the Delora mine in that locality, and a piece of pure mispickel containing gold, from the same mine. Both are very pretty samples of valuable minerals, and we think it of the Delora yields riches like this, no one should be beguiled by the reported wealth of Rossland, or the fabulous yarns of the frozen-up Klondike. There is enough mineral wealth in the township of Marmora, Madoc, Belmont, Methuen and Chandos for the safe investment of the millions of dollars, and the day is not far distant when that sector of country will become one great mining field. Only a short time ago, corundum was discovered in Methuen township, and there are deposits of iron and gold, and traces of silver, while in Chandos, the township north of it, discoveries of copper and lead have been made. With capital and enterprise the mineral lands of North Hastings and Peterborough will yield enormous wealth for hundreds of prospectors and miners.—Campbellford Herald.

Sudden Death of Mrs. Thos. Cummings

The utmost sympathy is felt for Mr. Thomas Cummings, Ried street, in the family trouble which has suddenly overtaken him. His wife—Annie McMurray daughter of Mr. Thomas McMurray, of Douro—expired very suddenly on Wednesday evening, the cause of death being heart trouble. She had had an attack of influenza, but was not ill enough to take to her bed. After supper on Wednesday evening she lay down on the sofa, saying she felt weak. Mr. Cummings, somewhat alarmed, went for a doctor, and on returning home a few moments later learned that his wife had died in his absence. Mrs. Cummings had been married four years, and leaves a two-year-old child. The funeral leaves 189 Ried street at nine o'clock this morning for St. Peter's Cathedral, en route to the Roman Catholic cemetery, where the interment will take place.

Three Factors

Courage, determination and persistency are great factors in successful advertising.

CAME NEAR BEING CRUSHED

Mr. Charles Gladman has a Very Narrow Escape

There was a wonderful escape at the Grand Trunk depot on Wednesday afternoon when Mr. Charles Gladman, for the Klondike. There were many friends at the station to see Charles off, and he had a busy time handshaking. As the train was about to pull out, he picked up his two suitcases and made to board the car. As he took hold of the railing on the front platform of the second last car he was about to step on, he was unable to recover himself on account of being hampered with the two suitcases. It looked to be but a matter of a moment before he would lose his hold and many turned away to escape seeing what seemed an unavoidable fatality, but just at that minute the baggage men sprang to the rescue and, catching hold of Mr. Gladman, threw him up on the platform of the car. It was a timely and wonderful escape.

HE IS COMMENCING EARLY

Youthful Offender in the Peterborough Lock-up

The Peterborough police have in the cells a boy aged 10, and scarcely know what to do with him. On the strength of a written order purporting to be signed by a married lady, he obtained 50 cents worth of goods from a local grocery store. The order turned out to be a forgery, and he was arrested and brought before Magistrate Dumble, who remanded him pending further inquiries. Amongst the many conflicting stories told was the statement that a bigger boy had written the order and sent him to obtain the groceries. The police are now looking for that other lad.

Committee Meetings Last Evening

The three committee meetings held at the City of the Peterborough Committee (Present: Councilors W. H. White, chairman, Mayor Davis, Robertson, Tangford, Cobb and Allen) it was resolved to instruct the Council to ask for tenders for fixing up the bridge and to get the best estimate possible. Councilor Dawson presided over the meeting of the Street and Bridge Committee, and the other members present were Mayor Davis and Councilors Best, W. H. White, McWilliams, Dawson, W. H. White, Denno, Tangford and Cobb. The business before the meeting was of little or no public interest.

Canadian Indians

The Rev. Dr. Sutherland, of Toronto, has received a letter from the Rev. Fred G. Stevens, missionary to the Indians in the Keewatin territory. In it Mr. Stevens says: "This is the hardest winter ever known in this land. So say the Indians and traders. The deer are gone, also the rabbits. Our people were too poor to provide themselves with food for the fall, and consequently fish in store was scarce. So I have not been able to buy a deer skin for travelling and that is a proof of destruction for our people had not then, to sell, I am afraid some of our people will starve before spring. We are all well provided for. Our only lack is for meat, and of that we get very little. When we do get it is brought four or five days' journey by dogs. Our house is cold and old, but we keep fires going night and day, and thus are comfortable. The thermometer has been down to forty-two degrees below zero and we expect to go down to sixty."

Smoking Concert

The non-commissioned officers of the 57th Battalion gave a very successful concert at St. James' last evening. Staff-Sergeant W. F. Green, president of the Sergeant's Mess, made an admirable chairman. The officers were Col. R. W. Bell, Capt. H. A. Morrow, (Adjutant), Capt. W. J. Miller, Capt. E. B. Clegg, Lieut. J. E. Ames, Lieut. G. S. Bell, Lieut. Clouston and Lieut. Lefevre, Major Greenwood, cavalry officer, was amongst the guests. The following gentlemen took part in contributing songs or recitations: Capt. Miller, Mr. R. M. Roy, Capt. J. E. Ames, Col-Sergeant J. E. Edwards and Bandmaster Wm. Miller. Short addresses were given by Lieut. Col. Bell, Capt. and Adj. Morrow, Lieut. Lefevre, Lieut. Ames and Major Greenwood.

Charges of Assault at Newwood

At the last Newwood County Police Court, Magistrate Edmondson dealt with two charges of assault. A small boy jumped upon the sleigh of a farmer driving into the village. He was struck by the driver and ordered off, and it was alleged was struck even after he had done so. The father of the boy presented this, and took satisfaction out of the farmer. Counter charges of assault were laid against the farmer. The Magistrate fined the farmer one dollar and the resident of the village ten dollars, both being found guilty.

Abolition of Council

There were not sufficient members of Abolition Council present last night to form a quorum to discuss the question of the proposed waterworks system. The meeting had been specially convened to take into consideration this matter, the importance of which can scarcely be exaggerated, and it is regrettable that a further postponement was rendered necessary by the absence of several of the "city fathers."

H. O. F.

Hiwatha Encampment No. 66 at the regular meeting Wednesday evening, one candidate was present, and enjoyed the mysteries of the Royal Purple Degree. One proposition for membership was made, three notices presented. Hiwatha is booming.

"Oh, my love, you're like a crow!" This was what the poet said; But this printer made it worse— And the mad bird smote him dead.

BOARD OF TRADE MEETING

Resolution Condemning America's Action re the Stickeen River

The Efficiency of the Bell Telephone Service Called in Question

A special meeting of the Board of Trade was held in the Council Chamber last evening, when Mr. Carnegie, chairman, presided over an attendance including Messrs. Burnham, Dumble, Fair, Mulholland, P. Campbell, Manson, Mills, and H. S. The meeting was called in order that the recent legislation by the American Senate in regard to the navigation of the Stickeen River might be discussed and a resolution passed thereon.

The chairman called upon Mr. Burnham to introduce the subject. Mr. Burnham said the general opinion seemed to be that something in the nature of crisis had been arrived at in the relations between Canada and the United States. Of course they were all familiar with the peculiar methods adopted on the other side to express linguistic feelings; but a peculiarly acute stage had been reached when the Americans, by means of a resolution of that body which they boasted of as the finest body of legislation in the world, chose to ignore the conditions of a Treaty which heretofore had never in any instance or in any particular been disputed.

Mr. Burnham said the general opinion seemed to be that something in the nature of crisis had been arrived at in the relations between Canada and the United States. Of course they were all familiar with the peculiar methods adopted on the other side to express linguistic feelings; but a peculiarly acute stage had been reached when the Americans, by means of a resolution of that body which they boasted of as the finest body of legislation in the world, chose to ignore the conditions of a Treaty which heretofore had never in any instance or in any particular been disputed. Both parties had agreed, and the papers of both parties seemed to agree, that so flagrant an attack as this upon the rights of Canadians could not be allowed to go by without a protest on the part of the British subjects; and it was not in regard to one thing but in regard to many that they had might be called, even in moderate language, the boldness to affirm that ungrateful Canadians give them certain concessions in the shape of privileges ever greater than they could give to their own people—or at least equal privileges—which they would not allow them to avail themselves of their rights at all. Of course it had seemed to everyone in the Dominion who was accustomed to express an opinion on things at all and who took a patriotic stand in these matters, that it was high time Canadians should stand upon their rights. Politicians did not enter into the question. Both parties had agreed, and the papers of both parties seemed to agree, that so flagrant an attack as this upon the rights of Canadians could not be allowed to go by without a protest on the part of the British subjects; and it was not in regard to one thing but in regard to many that they had might be called, even in moderate language, the boldness to affirm that ungrateful Canadians give them certain concessions in the shape of privileges ever greater than they could give to their own people—or at least equal privileges—which they would not allow them to avail themselves of their rights at all.

THE CHEESE SITUATION

Interesting Particulars as to Those Connected With the Great Industry

So much discussion has taken place recently concerning the prices of cheese and the views of buyers and sellers that it becomes necessary to state the true facts for the guidance of the parties who at present are unfortunate enough to have large quantities of August and September makes still unsold, and who, as a last resort, are contemplating shipment to England on their own account. The prices submitted by the producers of cheese in this country, which on the basis of prices ruling here and in England a handsome profit would be made, somewhere in the neighborhood of one cent per pound. It is feared that their expectations are not to be realized, as accompanying figures show. One very serious matter which has been entirely overlooked by those who propose shipping their cheese across the ocean is the very low rate at which sterling exchange is selling. This is a matter of finance, and a few factors may be convenient, but nevertheless a most important factor, which should always be taken into consideration. It is very doubtful if any of our banks would negotiate a bill of exchange at the present time at over eight and a quarter per cent. advance so that we will take that rate as a basis of the following calculation on a shipment of 100 boxes of cheese. The present price of cheese in England is said to be forty-five shillings per cwt. of 112 lbs. equal to $9.60 per 100 lbs. at eight and a quarter per cent. exchange:

100 boxes cheese, each 75 lbs. 7,500 lbs.
Less shrinkage, 1 lb per box ... 100 "
Total ... 7,400 lbs.
At $9.60 per cwt ... $714.84

Freight on 7,500 lbs. at 42c per 100 lb ... 31.50
Harbor dues weighing fees and contingencies ... 3.75
Cartage to warehouse ... 1.50
Marine Insurance, $900 at 45c ... 3.60
Selling commission, 4 per cent ... 28.60

Total ... 7,400 lbs.
Net proceeds ... 645.89
or an average of $872 on 7,500 lbs. of cheese.

In view of several offers of 1-2c. less made on cheese, it would be advisable for factors to look carefully into the details before sending cheese to the English market on consignment. It might be advisable, however to make a trial shipment of one hundred boxes for the sake of the exchange which might be derived therefrom.

Burglary at Morning

Early yesterday morning, burglars entered William Colville's barber shop by a back window and carried off a large quantity of pipes, tobacco and cigars. But fortunately overlooked quite a sum of money which was in the till. It is not supposed that the theft was committed by professionals. No arrests have yet been made.

Hamilton, requesting the Board of Trade to pass a resolution asking the Dominion Government to impose such export duties as would enable it to refine nickel in Canada so that it might be placed on an even footing with industries in the United States and other countries. The company promised to undertake to submit the Government as to its ability to carry out its enterprise and to manufacture steel and nickel steel billets to the extent of 1000 tons per day.

It was agreed that the questions should be considered at the annual meeting of the Board on Tuesday next. Mr. Dumble gave notice of his intention to move at the annual meeting a resolution favoring the request embodied in the letter of the Company. BELL TELEPHONE SERVICE.
Mr. Kells alluded to the petition which was in circulation complaining of the Bell Telephone service, and counselled its withdrawal. He observed that the rates in Peterborough were much lower than in other towns of smaller size in Ontario, and was of opinion that it would be well to do nothing to antagonize the Bell Telephone company, who, he understood, had the power to increase the subscriber's rates to $40.

Mr. Dumble spoke strongly against the present service, and said that when there was opposition to the Bell Telephone Company there was a much more prompt and clearer service than at present. "Now," said Mr. Dumble, "it is a clash and noise and confusion, and considerable delay in awaiting the leisure of the people at the Central office to answer your call. Speaking for myself, I say the service is bad." He added that complaints were general in the town.

Mr. Knapman of the central office, defended the telephone service, and said persons who had complaints to make would be doing a kindness to him by making those complaints to him personally. They wished to do all they could to ensure the efficiency of the service. It was agreed that the petition referred to should not be forwarded until after the annual meeting of the Board if being understood that the subject would again be discussed at that meeting. The Board afterwards adjourned.

CANADA AND UNITED STATES

The temperate tone which characterized the utterances of the speakers at the special meeting of the Board of Trade called to consider the antagonistic legislation of the American Senate is to be commended. Nothing is gained by the violent use of extravagant language. On the contrary, a strong case and an unanswerable one, too—such as the Canadians have in the matter of the Stikkeen River controversy always carries more weight when presented with moderation: and we have sufficient confidence in the practical common sense of our neighbors that the more honest among American politicians will admit the logical strength of the representations made to them by the Dominion Government, and will not persist in a policy which is distinctly based upon a violation of the rights of British subjects as observed by the Treaty of Washington.

There is a limit of good nature and forbearance beyond which a nation or a people cannot go without an abandonment of self-respect, to any nothing of loss of prestige, which consideration of course cannot be disregarded; and Mr. Burnham and Mr. Dumble spoke correctly last night when they declared that that limit had been reached. For years the policy of the United States has seemed to have been dictated by a spirit of hostile indifference towards a people, blood relations of their own, the cultivation of whose friendship would be advantageous to both. The contemplation of a cordial relationship between these two offshoots, as they may be termed, of the parent tree, Great Britain, opens upon a glowing prospect; and the better-class American, who is by no means an unknown quantity, recognizes this, and hopes for the overthrow of the party boss which would hasten so much desired a condition of affairs.

The threat to block the free navigation of the Stikkeen River provided unreasonable concessions are not made to Americans in regard to the Klondike is a practical renunciation of solemn treaty pledges. Such conduct is unworthy of an Anglo-Saxon people, and is descending to the slippery and tricky methods employed by that master of subtleties, the Sultan of Turkey.

Canada has protested, respectfully but firmly. She possesses the key to the situation, and has therefore nothing to fear. If America remains firmly determined to break her pledges, then Canada, too, can be firm, and prohibit the immigration of any United States man into the Yukon district. But we do not anticipate that the worst will come to the worst. A via media can be found and will be found.

The news from the United States is full of Spain.

Hamilton is supplying Chicago with turnips. Will the Americans take a carrot, too?

Next to a love valentine, our street crossings of Peterborough are the safest things we have come across.

American politics would seem to largely consist of the rolling of logs, the pulling of wires and the laying of pipes.

J. Israel Tarte requires to be taken with sugar. Sir Wilfrid's henchman is making some Tarte rejoinders to his political opponents.

Never "swap horses" when crossing a stream. The Conservatives of Russell have ignored the old proverb, much against their personal inclinations.

George Washington's death, though sad, was timely. His habit of telling the truth would have handicapped him seriously in modern political contests.

The yellow fever germ has been discovered. Will the learned professors now hunt for the yellow journalist germ in order that the plague may be stayed?

The Toronto Sun has been saying a good word for the local press of Ontario. This is more than most of the local newspapers will say for their contemporaries.

In Russell constituency the Parliamentary candidates are of a retiring disposition. It is the Conservative man who has shied this time. He thought it was time for a change.

It is a curious coincidence that Mr. Stratton's majority (999) in West Peterborough should be the same as the number of pocket knives entered in the public accounts for 1906.

If instead of granting fifty million dollars to prepare for war, Congress had granted five hundred million dollars to be spent in teaching Yankees to behave with some kind of dignity in time of peace, the appropriation would have been a wise one.

It is a beautiful reflection to think that the recent campaign was won by both sides. One party won a moral victory, and the other side won the other kind. When all the protests have been decided we shall know a little more about the morality of the fight.

There have been numerous interpretations of the meaning expressed by the Ontario voters in the recent election. For our own part, we confess that we are in a nebulous state of mind. It is clear that Ontario's meaning is not clear. There will be no clear-sauce until next fall.

Referring to the demands made by the Yankees in anticipation of the Canadian Government's request for lightening privileges at Wrangle, the Montreal Herald, a Liberal journal, intimates that our neighbors want the earth and the fulness thereof. And it may be remarked that they are using Sifton for the shovel.

Pedants are discussing whether a person "sustains" a broken leg, or "gets" a broken leg. Here in Ontario the Conservatives are troubling themselves as to whether Laurier "sustained" a broken arm or "got" his Hardy arm broken. It would appear that Hardy "got" there, temporarily at least, without being well sustained.

Was There Ever a Greater Victory?

Paines Celery Compound the World's Famous Disease Banisher, Saves the Life of Mr. Church

All Other Medicines Had Failed and Death Was Fully Expected

As a Spring Medicine for New Blood, New Strength and Sound Health, Paines Celery Compound is Recommended by Thousands

The complete cure of John A. Church of Colchester, N.S., and the production of his strong letter of testimony in favor of Paines Celery Compound are of themselves sufficient to convince every sick person that Paines Celery Compound is a medicine honestly prepared and recommended for the curing of all sick people. No other medicine known to medical science can so well and so promptly restore lost strength and vitality in the spring months. It is not the common medicines of the day that physicians prescribe and the best classes recommend. It is only a wonderful and marvellous life restorer like Paines Celery Compound that can command attention and respect. Mr. Church writes as follows: Wells & Richardson Co., pe which put me into such a condition that I could not sleep or eat. I was completely run down, had extreme nervous prostration, and lay for days in a half stupified state. After spending all my money for medicine which did little good, I gave up to die, when one day a paper was brought to me on Paines Celery Compound. I at once procured the medicine and derived great relief from the first bottle. I slept better, ate better and digestion improved. After using nine bottles I feel like a new man. I can truly say that Paines Celery Compound snatched me from the grave and gave me a new lease of life. I earnestly urge all sufferers to use Paines Celery Compound, feeling sure it will cure them. Do not spend your money for medicine that cannot cure you.

Yours truly,
John A. Church.

DEPISSE NO MESSENGER

In a great monarchy no subject can tell what other men may or may not be a messenger from the king. Angels of mercy seldom carry harps and arrive amidst radiant light and a vast flapping of wings. It may be a little child who shall bring you the longed-for good news or, as in the case of Mrs. Charlotte Davis, it may be a quiet old lady who drops in to make an ordinary friendly call.

And help was badly needed, as it always is when pain and illness crush these frail bodies of ours as the rascal bend and bow before the swollen stream. Referring to the old lady's call Mrs. Davis draws aside the curtain from an old experience of the summer of 1878. She says: "I fell into a condition that was strange and new to me. I didn't know how to account for it, nor could I tell what it was going to lead to. I had always a bad taste in the mouth, and was constantly retching and spitting up a sour fluid. The sense and feeling of it were horrible. My appetite failed until food had no attraction for me. Even after taking the least morsel I had great pain at the chest and under the shoulder blades. But the complaint seemed to be seated more particularly in the stomach. There the pain was very keen and violent. Sometimes it felt like a knife cutting me. I got no rest day or night, and was confined to my bed, for weeks together. Inasmuch as I could take no solid nourishment I grew weaker and weaker as the weary time dragged by. Indeed my only food was milk and soda water."

[We may remark at this point that Mrs. Davis' entire digestive system was, at the time she speaks of, dangerously deranged. The failure of the appetite was a signal indicating that the presence of food in the stomach could not be tolerated. As it could not be digested it would only serve to aggravate the inflammation which was raging there. Such a state of things is bad as possible. The very source of all power and life was virtually paralyzed. We must eat in order to live, and yet—in such a case—to eat is only to invite additional suffering and to bid for a more speedy death. Hence the terror of that illness, which some silly people (who have never had an ailment of as "only an attack of indigestion and dyspepsia.") Would they allude to an inhabited dwelling wrapped in flames as "Only a house on fire"]

Mrs. Davis and plenty of others whom we know, are able to rebuke that adulated sort of talk.

She continues: "The doctor who attended me said I had inflammation, caused by gall stones."

[Very likely. Gall stones are composed of bile sand, which is carried into the gall bladder and then adheres until the larger stones or masses are formed. The bile has stagnated, owing to the poisons from the stomach acting on the liver, until this painful and dangerous complication results. In other words, gall stones mean biliousness and dyspepsia means indigestion and dyspepsia.]

But let us listen again to the lady: "I lay in great agony," she says, "week after week, during which time I passed two gall stones. The doctor's treatment gave me no relief, and what I suffered for one year is indescribable. One day an old lady called at my home, and seeing my condition, strongly urged me to take Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup. I said, 'Yes, of course, I'll take anything that will help me.' After the first bottle I passed a third stone, but this time without pain. I kept on with the syrup and was soon as well as ever. Since that time, now fourteen years ago, I have kept in good health and perfectly free from my old ailment. I will answer inquiries from any sufferer. Yours, &c. Signed, Charlotte Davis, 8, Editha Street, Stockwell, London, September 27th, 1893."

"The first bringer of unwelcome news," says Shakespeare, "has a losing office." Quite true, but the messenger who tells of help and rescue wins a better place in our memory. Does he not? Yes, say all of us.

MORAL ENVIRONMENT

By Lady Cook.

The influence of environment upon every organic being is no longer a matter of doubt. The researches of recent years have thrown much light on this subject, and have proved that the processes of evolution are very largely dependent upon the conditions of the environment. Environment has a prodigious influence in forming physical character. It is the same in the mental and the moral world. Our intellectual culture mainly depends upon our mental environment, as our moral culture on our moral environment. If a child of the most illiterate parents be closely associated from early infancy with persons of culture, the chances are many to one that he also will be cultured. He may not have the wide mental grasp of one born from a stock of intellectual ancestors, but he will have a certain improved grasp and his mind will be harmonized to the tone of theirs. There are many even amongst those of hereditary culture who rise to great intellectual heights, but all acquire an intellectual tone which adds to the refinement and enjoyment of life. The love of knowledge, for its own sake, apart from any notion of utility, is one of the most delightful of intellectual passions. And this they all possess in a higher or lower degree. Their intellectual environment elevates, as it were, and spiritualizes every sense. They see, for instance, with other eyes, and hear with other ears, than those who have not received their mental advantages. And their perceptions may become refined that even the meanest things of nature become objects of absorbing interest and beauty.

Now all this is a distinct gain, better it may be, than wealth and power, for it gives us something which we are always able to enjoy, and which no one can take from us. Nevertheless, high culture may coexist with great vices, and many intellectual men have become abandoned voluptuaries, making their great acquirements subservient to evil. Thus splendid physical and mental powers may be destructive to their possessors unless they are controlled by correct moral feeling. Consequently a suitable moral environment is necessary to enable us to develop the higher faculties of our nature, and to perfect the whole man. A good physical constitution is eminently desirable, extensive mental acquirements are also to be diligently attained so far as we are able; but a sound moral constitution will do more for the real happiness and welfare of the individual than anything else. The greatest strength and the most brilliant talents, if misdirected, alike with but a feeble lustre when compared with the sublimity of a high moral nature. We hear much of athletics and the higher education. Both are good but neither is the highest. The truly higher education is not to be found in any scholastic curriculum but resides immediately in our home, and circles of acquaintances, and more remotely in our general environment. But while physical and mental education have their gymnasia, schools, and colleges, in abundance, moral education is left pretty much to shift for itself. We put the cart before the horse, and expect both to go on straight and merrily! We subordinate the higher to the lower, and are surprised if the higher do not rule!

Let men say what they will, but no one is a free agent. Each is first restricted by the eternal laws of nature, and next is modified by every varying circumstance. Environment fashions us whether we will or not; environment controls our will, forms our sentiments, gives us our speech, our morality, and our religion, clothes and educates us, and shapes our destiny. Predestination is not required for these things; environment is all-sufficient.

This view which is surely a correct one, should go far to destroy many errors, one of which is that all delinquency must be punished. We might go further and question if any punishment is useful, and whether it does not do more harm than good. What our criminals and ne'er-do-wells of the community want is not punishment, but pity; and that not the idiotic or sentimental pity which pets and coddles them, and does more for them than for honest people, but the pity which is resolute for their reformation or their destruction—reformation if it can be attained, extinction if it can not. We expect all our citizens to be well conducted and honest. But what sort of an environment surrounds the greater part of them? Is it conducive to manliness in the men or modesty in the women? Or is it too often a circle of vice and debauchery? Our slums reek with physical and moral filth, our streets are at the mercy of drunken and foul-mouthed ruffians and abandoned women, who perambulate them at pleasure and hustle virtue from the pavement. Shall we flog them at the cart's tail, as of old, or reform them by not resuming obsolete punishments, but how can they be reformed? By a change of environment, by withdrawing them from their old haunts and compelling them to earn an honest living in specially arranged homes and in a moral atmosphere. We have a vast number of notoriously immoral persons, and we have a great many intelligent and charitably disposed people with nothing to do. Here are the two forces which shall come together, the vicious and the reformative. Paid agents would be useless for this remedial work, for unless done from a spirit of pure charity it would never succeed. But gentle men and women urged by the divine impulses of the good monks and nuns of old days, could we send back many an evil and stubborn nature to the paths of decency and rectitude, and do what prisons and paid chaplains could never accomplish. At present things are going altogether wrong. The social evil is increasing, so are insanity and legal offences. Precept on the part of the young for age, for goodness, for the sex, and for their superiors, is decreasing, and threatens to disappear altogether. The Board Schools turn their pupils out with enough of superficial knowledge to make them conceited and saucy, but with the minimum of moral training. We need new environments, or rather a purifying of the present ones, and these can be gained only by general and systematic effort on the part of all concerned, and by parental and patriotic determination to eliminate or suppress, at any cost, the rapidly increasing incentives to evil.

A BROKER BROKEN.

Stomach Troubles, Indigestion, and its Distressing Accompaniments Were Snapping the Life Strings—South American Nerveine Proved "Better Than Gold."

Mr. John Boyer, money broker, Kincardine, Ont., writes: "Three years ago I was very much troubled with indigestion. I was a great sufferer. I procured and tried South American Nerveine; a few doses wonderfully helped me, and two or three bottles cured me. I have no hesitation in recommending it heartily to all sufferers from stomach trouble."

Andrews, of Akron, O., says: "I read this paper and have seen many reports of remarkable cures made by Drs. Kennedy and Kergan. I decided to treat with them. Indigestion was the cause of my trouble. I was weak and nervous; no ambition; back weak; pimples on the face; thin and haggard; eyes sunken and cheeks hollow; dreams and drains at night; memory poor; varicose and weak parts; irritability; sinking spells; spoke before the eyes; lack of confidence; no energy; and many other complaints. I had tried many doctors, bought and used electric belts took scores of bottles of patent medicines—all failed. I tried the New Method Treatment of Drs. Kennedy and Kergan, and it cured me. I am a Man Again. I have gained twenty-six pounds and am strong mentally, physically and morally. It is a wonderful treatment!"

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 14, 1898

IF WAR SHALL COME

If war shall come between Spain, once the proudest empire of the world, and the United States, it will not be because either nation desires it. War will come solely because Spain must accept war to escape domestic revolution.

In no other way can Spain confess her failure to suppress the insurrection in Cuba than by a war with the United States. If the Spanish Government were even to entertain the question of surrendering Cuba, the already highly inflamed Spanish people would topple the crown over in a day, and anarchy would reign supreme. Spain cannot suppress the Cuban insurrection. Her armies have failed to defeat the insurgents in battle after three years of war, and the insurgent armies are stronger and better equipped to-day than at any time since the war began. The point seems to have been reached, or nearly reached, when Spain must face the fact that Cuba is lost to that once proud empire; and the day that the hope of conquering the insurgents in Cuba, perhaps, must compel the Spanish Government to choose between a war with the United States or a sweeping revolution at home.

Spanish credit is exhausted. Her war per cents are now quoted at 55 to 60 in the money markets of Europe. Two days ago when there were grave apprehensions of immediate war with Spain, her securities fell two points on the market. It is not possible for her to protect an indefinite war with Cuba, and in the near future she is likely to be compelled to find some pretext for war with the United States to crystallize her people in support of the government, and thus get a new but probably a brief lease of power for the crown.

War with Spain is, therefore, not only possible but quite probable in the near future, and the fact that America has given no cause for it, has made her government strong before her people and the civilized nations of the world. She will go to war because she must, and when war shall come, it can last but a few months at most, resulting in the capture and independence of Cuba, with a possible indemnity to Spain. Spain might escape revolution on the surrender of Cuba by obtaining a reasonable indemnity guaranteed by a protectorate of the United States over the revenues and property of Cuba.

If war shall come a very few thousand men would be needed in Cuba to unite with the insurgents, as the whole insurgent force would be promptly supplied with the best arms and munitions and with artillery with which they could capture any seaport city from inland and drive the Spanish forces into the sea.

The buy-cycle season will soon be upon us.

The civilized world is busily engaged in blowing up Spain.

The key to the Spanish-American situation is to be found at Key West.

While the Dominion government may have millions invested in "deals," yet they cannot be said to be in the lumber business.

Mr. Sifton declares that whoever defeats the Yukon Railway Bill will be held to a bitter account. Does he mean a Tartar account?

The government has given up the piggy business, and ought therefore to be able to devote more attention to legislative enterprise, provided it contains sufficient capital in the way of a working majority.

Party journals are constantly recounting tales of the re-counts. They should be liberally discounted. The Times will tell you how the whole business will turn out when it is all settled by the election judges.

The growling of the British lion will likely develop into a roar before long. There will be a few earthquakes on hand if he should turn nasty.

The intemperance of so-called temperance people is daily noticeable. One of the latest samples is the declaration of Dr. Talmage, who, with that unlimited license enjoyed, often abused in the pulpit, says that the late Admiral Sir George Tryon was drunk at the time of the ramming of the Camperdown three or four years ago, when over 400 lives were lost. As a matter of fact, the brave old Sir George was noted for his temperate habits, and the only "fault" that his friends had to find with him was that he would not drink. Dr. Talmage may be a clever and sensational preacher, but he does not yet fully appreciate the gospel of charity. He must take care, or the editor of a yellow journal may require him to join his staff.

LOUISA M. ALCOTT'S CREED.

Was Taught That "The Love of Goodness Was the Love of God."

In a number of letters written at long and short intervals from 1878 to 1880 by Louisa M. Alcott, to five little girls in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, the author of "Little Women" most charmingly and frankly discloses her extraordinary nature, and the mission, edited by Edward W. Bok, are given to the public in April Ladies' Home Journal. In one of the tenderest of these letters, invoked by the sad information of the death of one of the sisters Miss Alcott wrote her sorrowing correspondents:

"I will tell you my experience, and as it has stood the test of youth and age, health and sickness, joy and sorrow, poverty and wealth, I feel that it is genuine, and seem to get more light, warmth and help as I go on learning more of it year by year. My parents never bound us to any shroud, but taught us that the love of goodness was the love of God, the cheerful doing of duty made life happy, and that the love of one's neighbor in its widest sense was the best help for one's self. Their lives showed us how lovely this simple faith was, how much honor, gratitude and affection it brought them, and what a sweet memory they left behind, for, though father still lives, his life is over, as far as thought or usefulness are possible. Theodora Parker and Ralph Waldo Emerson did much to help me to see that one can shape life best by trying to build up a strong and noble character, through good books, wise people's society, an interest in all reforms that help the world, and a cheerful acceptance of whatever is inevitable; seeing a beautiful compensation in what often seems a great sacrifice, sorrow or loss, and believing always that a wise, loving and just Father cares for us, sees our weakness and is near to help if we call. Have you read Emerson? He is called a Pantheist or believer in Nature instead of God. He was truly Christian, and saw God in Nature, finding strength and comfort in the same sweet influences of the great Mother as well as the Father of all. I, too, believe this, and when tired, sad or tempted find my best comfort in the woods, the sky, the healing solitude that lets my poor, weary soul find the rest, the fresh hope or the patience which only God can give us. People used to tell me that when sorrow came I should find my faith faulty because I had no name, but they were wrong for when the heavy loss of my dear, gifted sister found me too feeble to do anything but suffer passively, I still had the sustaining sense of a love that never failed, even when I could not see why this lovely life should end when it was happiest. As a poor, proud, struggling girl I held to the belief that if I deserved success it would surely come so long as my ambition was not for selfish ends but for my dear family, and it did come, far more fully than I ever hoped or dreamed, though youth, health and many hopes went to earn it. Now, when I might enjoy rest, pleasure and travel, I am still tied by new duties to my baby, and give up my dreams, sure that something better will be given me in time. Freedom was always my longing, but I have never had it, so I am still trying to feel that this is the discipline I need, and when I am ready the liberty will come."

Preventing Frozen Water Pipes.

Mr. James Christian Brown has offered a suggestion for the cure of frozen water pipes. Speaking at a congress of plumbers, he pointed out that water pipes would never burst if protected by a vacuum. In the experiments at the Royal Institute upon liquid air and liquid oxygen, fluids were dealt with at a temperature of 180 degrees below freezing point. At such a temperature it would have been impossible to work with the fluids under ordinary conditions, but in tubes or boilers with vacuum jackets they were handled with the utmost facility, and poured from one to another without difficulty, because the temperature could not pass through the vacuum. "Why," asked Mr. Brown, "could not plumbers invent a vacuum pipe? A space even an eighth of an inch of a high vacuum would be sufficient. Inoculate the pipe to be protected in an outer tube, exhaust the air from the intervening space, and hermetically seal the inclosing tube at the ends, then no change of temperature could affect the protected pipe." Criticizing this suggestion, a correspondent says the idea is not new, as he suggested it ten years ago. He has done more; he has tried to utilize it, but found that as the inner pipe must be supported throughout its length, these points of contact form conductors. A simpler plan, he says, is to inclose the pipes in a bituminous cylinder, which, when slightly warmed, can be curved or bent, thus adapting both tubes simultaneously to any necessary curves, as well as affording better facilities for jointing and connecting.

Making Escape in Case of Fire Eager.
A Canadian engineer, speaking of the large number of fatal fires which have lately been recorded, says that these persistently recurring fatalities render legislative interference imperative to enforce the carrying out of a plan by which any building used as a manufactory, hotel, asylum, convent, college, etc., may be immediately and simultaneously vacated in case of a panic—to wit, a continuous iron gallery, or balcony to each and every occupied floor above the first. On to this floor the inmates shall be able to step out instantly from every window, thus giving direct access from each story to one or more stairways completely cut off from all communication with the interior. This plan has already been adopted extensively throughout Canada in the construction of public buildings. It is also seen in the lately reconstructed theater at Antwerp, Flanders, where each of the five tiers of boxes has been provided with a continuous outer iron balcony or gallery, surrounding the building, with twenty-five doors opening thereon from each floor, or 150 exits, exclusive of those at the ground level in connection with the orchestra seats, the pit and the stage.

Photographing a Bullet Passing Through Glass.
Prof. Boys has made a beautiful series of photographs of the Lee-Metford bullet as it passed through a one-fourth-inch sheet of glass. A disk of glass, one-half the diameter of the bullet, which was 308-inch caliber, was cut out of the sheet by the slip wave before the bullet struck it. All around the hole thus made, the glass was crushed into powder and driven backward. One picture showed the glass shattering to the bullet for some time after it had passed through, the disk being driven on in front of the slip wave at the point. Another photograph showed the remainder of the glass sheet was intact after the bullet had passed on for a distance of 9 inches. When the bullet had reached 10 inches further the sheet of glass broke and fell to pieces.

BIRTH ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Some of the Various Ways in Which Newspapers Print Them.

Of all the things that appear in the regular and ordinary "make-up" of a newspaper, birth notices are perhaps the most amusing. They find their way into both metropolitan and country newspapers. The latter especially teem with them. The cross-roads correspondent seems such a curious personage, hence their frequent appearance in The Pine Hill Epistle. Some papers have particular columns or spaces devoted to birth, marriage and obituary news. Others record the same events under the titles "Cradle," "Altar" and "Tomb," while a third class use three words in the headline, "Yells," "Bells" and "Knells." The following are a few notices clipped at random from papers all over the United States and Canada, says The Chicago Times-Herald. Some are to the point, while others convey more information than is necessary:

McDonald—May 28, 1896, a daughter to Daniel and Emma L. Albert Drinkie is a papa. A little girl baby began its residence with Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Waitly Wednesday of last week.

A little son-beam came to brighten the home of Attorney J. C. Russell and wife on Thursday afternoon of last week.

What causes Charlie Prudden to smile? Oh, it's a boy. Tom Arnold reports a lovely little Bryantite at his house since Monday night. The little man is rather wee as yet.

Another new blacksmith came to Waco. For particulars see Albert Kidd.

A little city treasurer made its appearance at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Washburn last Saturday.

On Thursday eve of last week a little girl was left at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Cannon. As it was good looking they concluded to keep it until it was 18.

H. C. Sackett was all smiles on Saturday, and his friends found that good J. D. were none to good for the day. A girl arrived at his house that day. Father doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances.

Born, in Lansing, on Sunday last Dec. 8, to Mr. and Mrs. George Robinson, twins—a boy and a girl. We are very glad to see that George has been converted to the theory of the double standard. We would like to suggest as names for these two precious youngsters Sylvester and Goldie.

There will be another stocking to hang up at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George White in the southwest country this Christmas. It's a boy, and from the report we judge he is a dandy.

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Cox, Sunday night, twin girls. Dr. Dillon was in attendance, and says all are doing nicely. Ed, however, had to be watched closely by his friends for a day or two, but is out of danger now and is perfectly harmless.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reynolds have welcomed to their home a daughter, born Dec. 8.

N. H. Tracy now wears a 9 by 14 smile on his face, all on account of the arrival of a new dishwasher at his house the 10th ult.

Dr. Frank Kimler, the Leroy dentist, formerly of this city, takes his happiness in double doses. He is the father of twins.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Dryfus of 14 Washington avenue have already received their Christmas gift. It is a plump, dimpled little girl.

A young voter arrived at the home of Pete Olson recently. Of course, he missed the election, but fortunately McKinley had no need of more votes this time.

J. W. Rogers is entertaining a very young gentleman, who took up a permanent residence with him on last Thursday.

A little gentleman arrived at G. Ericson's last week, apparently quite determined to make that his future home. All concerned are doing well.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. Harding have presented this town with the first McKinley baby. He was born Dec. 5, and will be known as Owen McKinley Harding.

A new toll-gate keeper arrived at Mr. Hardcastle's Thursday night. His name is Wm. Bryan.

W. H. Weland is happy. He hasn't stopped smiling since he was informed yesterday that he had attained the dignity of being grandpa. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Moore being the parents of a 10 1/2-pound baby girl.

"At 18" age of 21 commenced to ruin my health. Later on as "ONE OF THE" I contracted a serious blood disease—SYPHILIS. CHILD IMMIGRATION

SOCIETIES AUTHORIZED TO ACT UNDER THE RECENT PROVINCIAL STATUTE.

The Ontario Government has issued an order-in-Council authorizing certain societies who have agreed to comply with the regulations recently passed regarding the immigration of English children into the Province to engage in work under the act. The following are the headquarters in Canada of the societies referred to:

Barnardo's Distributing Home for Boys, 214 Eglinton Avenue, West, Toronto; Barnardo's Distributing Home for Girls, Peterborough; Miss McPherson's Distributing Home, Stratford; J. W. C. Pagan's Distributing Home, George Street, Toronto; Southwark Catholic Emigration Society's Distributing Home, Hintonburg, Ontario; Marchmont Home, Belleville, Ontario; and Stevenson Home, Hamilton.

CHANGED THEIR MINDS

INTENTION OF THE GOVERNMENT WAS TO NOMINATE HON. J. M. GIBSON.

It is said by Conservatives that it was the intention of the Ontario Government to have Hon. J. M. Gibson nominated in Russell county, and that Hon. G. W. Ross attended the nomination for the purpose of guaging the feeling of the constituency and proposing the defeated minister if advisable. It is said, however, that the Minister of Education saw so many signs of Conservative strength that he would not take the risk of nominating a gentleman so little known in the riding.

FIRE IN TOWN

Considerable Damage Done on the Premises of a Grocery Store

At about three o'clock yesterday morning a fire broke out in the store of Messrs. E. F. Mason & Co., grocers, George Street. Smoke was observed issuing from the windows of the flat immediately above the store. The alarm was at once sounded, and the fire brigade promptly responded. It was discovered that the interior of the shop was on fire, and it was with some little difficulty that the flames were got under control. The fire, it appears, was due to spontaneous combustion, in a small tin of old clothes which someone had left in the store and which had been thrown in a corner. The damage to the goods is considerable, and is covered by insurance.

Capture Deformity etc.
To-day we print the advertisement of the Toronto Electric Belt & Truss Co., of Toronto. It is a pleasure to recommend the appliances made by this firm to our readers who are ruptured or deformed. We know the goods to be of very highest quality, and the prices charged very reasonable. The manager of the Company, Mr. C. H. Dorenwend, is the son of Prof. Dorenwend, the Hair Goods Artist, so long and favorably known throughout Canada and the United States. Mr. Dorenwend is a thorough and practical mechanic, and has invented many appliances which successfully relieve and cure afflicted humanity. He has departed entirely from the old style cumbersome appliances and produced apparatus to correct any and all deformities, as spinal curvature, crooked feet and limbs, hip disease, rupture, etc., etc. The firm also manufactures electric belts, shoulder braces, suspensories, etc. If you want anything in this line, we would advise you to communicate with them at Toronto.

FLORIDA ON WHEELS

A Car Full of Wood is Inclosed in a Monster Man Eating Alligator, coming to Peterborough Friday and Saturday March 14th and 15th

A marvellous revelation of tropical luxuriance, a Florida State Fair, in a rolling palace from the land of flowers, gorgeous with golden decorations and tropical scenery, filled with a tropical exhibit, imposing in multitude, wonderfully realistic, marvellous in variety and splendid with a thousand tropical wonders, illustrating to tourists, the advantages and resources of that sunny land, Florida fruits, Florida wines, exquisite perfumed fountains, waving palms, live alligators, etc.

"Bear in Mind that the Alligators are chained"

This conservatory on wheels, a tropical wonderland, was built of Florida woods at a total cost of $20,000. It is the most remarkable car on either continent: has been visited by more people on the inside, and gazed at by more people on the outside, than any car built in the history of railroading. People flock to it night and day, and papers have described it from ocean to ocean as the first of its kind the world ever saw.

To defray incidental expenses, a nominal price of 10c, 5 cents for children 11 and under, will be charged.

The S. Webb, Director-General Florida Sub-Tropical Exposition, Florida Commissioner to Paris Exposition and the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, and Official Promoter of Florida Publicity, is director.

This Official State Fair "On Wheels" will exhibit in Peterborough Friday and Saturday, March 25 and 26, at the G.T.R. station from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

SHARKS OF SOCIETY

THE MONEY LENDERS OF LONDON CONDEMNED BY SIR GEORGE LEWIS.

London, March 12.—Sir George Lewis, the well-known lawyer, before the House of Commons committee enquiring into the evils of money-lending, condemned the business in the strongest terms, saying it frequently cost the victims 2,000 per cent.

He complained particularly of the transactions of such men as Sam. Lewis, who said the bulk of them were Jews, "and, being a Jew," he could say of his own knowledge, that "the Jewish community loathed and despised them, refusing to allow them to hold any position in the Jewish synagogues, and the Jewish rabbis preached against them and their practices."

Referring to the Earl Spencer-Cray scandal, Sir George Lewis said Sam Lewis had discounted £100,000 at 40 per cent. He added that the laws of England all favored the money-lenders, and said that in Germany the usury laws worked well, also.

The Kidneys

are the seat or the starting point of many maladies, all of them serious, all more or less painful, and all of them tending, unless cured, to a fatal end. No organs of the body are more delicate or more sensitive than the kidneys. When symptoms of disease appear in them not a moment is to be lost if health is to be restored. The best way to treat the kidneys is through the blood, cleansing it from the poisonous matter which is usually at the bottom of kidney complaints. For this purpose there is no remedy equal to

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For many years I have been a constant sufferer from kidney trouble, and have tried a number of largely advertised cures without benefit. At last a friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The use of eight bottles of this remedy entirely cured my malady."—MART MILLER, 1235 Hancock Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

IRISH LEADERS BETRAYED

A MEMBER GIVING PARTY SECRETS TO THE LONDON TIMES.

(Special to the Times)
London, March 12.—Much perturbation reigns in the ranks of the Irish Parliamentary party here in consequence of the conviction which has been reached that there is a spy among the members thereof. A determined effort is being made to discover his identity. However private Irish meetings in the House of Commons may be, the Times invariably has a detailed report of them. Resolutions have been passed strongly reprobating the dishonorable conduct of the member who reveals the intentions of the party, but these have not sufficed to stop the leakage, and there is some talk of a secret vigilance committee to investigate the matter. Only the other day the Times was supplied with important private information. The feelings of the Irish party as a whole may best be appreciated by the epithets which they apply in the lobby to the informer, who is a "renegade," "a traitorous person," "an informer," "a person opposed to all ideas of honor, self-respect, or good faith."

AMALGAMATION OF BOOKS

AYRSHIRE ASSOCIATION OF ONTARIO AND QUEBEC ARE NOW UNITED.

The annual meeting of the combined societies will be held alternately in Montreal and Toronto. The new association will be named the Canadian Ayrshire Association. The Holstein herd book is the only one in the Dominion that is not now kept at Toronto.

PETERBORO'S STRONG CLAIM

The Town Makes a Good Bid for the C. W. A. Meet

The Why and the Wherefore of it all—Peterborough's Enterprise—Its Unrivaled Attractions

It will not be the fault of Mr. Frank H. Dobbin, the energetic Secretary of the Peterborough Bicycle Club, or of the institution he represents, if the first C. W. A. meet does not take place in our town. In a circular letter, addressed to the members of the Canadian Wheelmen's Association of the Province of Ontario, he urges the following powerful considerations in support of Peterborough's strong claim:

Gentlemen.—With you rests the decision as to where the first provincial meet, that of 1898, shall be placed. The Peterborough Bicycle Club asks your support and hopes to gain your approval. Our pleasure in placing before you its claims for your support.

GIVE THE CLUB ITS DUES.
Peterborough has put up good-looking fights for the meet. Twice it has been beaten—Waterloo one year—Quebec another. Pluck and spirit deserve recognition. The club relies on its record in this respect.

Peterborough has grown up with the association. Its membership has kept pace with the best. It now stands fifth largest in the Dominion. Peterborough has never sulked, but even when beaten, has gone on and rolled up an increased membership. It has backed the association. "What is best for the general interests" has carried weight with Peterborough.

GIVE ITS ENTERPRISE A LIFT.
Peterborough will place at your disposal one of its finest tracks and best grounds in Canada. Coulter's mile in 1895, unplaced, 1.57.12 shows what the track offers. Half-mile, perfect bottom, full track width. Fenced, with ample grand stand accommodation, and all within a half-mile of centre of the town.

A LOW COST TRIP.
Peterborough is so centrally situated that thousands may reach it at a small expense. The C.P.R. and G.T.R. offer capital facilities. Either line from Toronto, Montreal, or T.R. from North and South, may reach Peterborough as early as 5 a.m. from the East, and leave as late as 11:30 p.m. You can reach Peterborough as early as 8:20 from the West and leave as late as 11:30. Trains in between from all directions. Cheap holiday fares will be the rule. Figure up at how little expense you can come to this meet.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATION.
The visiting wheelman likes to know that he has a roof over his head. Though he is not always sure of it, Peterborough has twenty-two hotels. Don't fear lack of accommodation. A complete system of billets will be made out and provisions will be made to engage in advance for all who apply in time accommodation either at hotels or boarding houses or in private families. If you write in time your wishes will receive attention.

PETERBOROUGH'S ATTRACTIONS.
To the wheelman who wishes to enjoy a holiday as well as attend the meet, Peterborough offers unrivalled attractions. Through the generosity of wealthy citizens we have the most extensive Park system in Canada. Capital places for pleasure or exercise. A splendid 1.3 mile track in the East Nicholls Park. Jackson Park is a beautiful spot. Peterborough has capital roads leading out to the well known summer resort, Chenoix Park. A half hour ride—and to Lakefield—a 10-mile spin—beyond Stone Lake. The latter lake is the favorite camping ground and holiday place for thousands. Hundreds of fine cottages adorn the islands. Good hotels abound.

Down-the-river trips are enjoyable. Idyl Wild and Jubilee Point on Rice Lake are favorite resorts. Boats run on close time during the day. The boating and fishing at all these places is first-class.

THE MEETS DOINGS.
Peterborough will put up a full quota of races and contests. The prize list will be liberal and to the winners—remunerative. There will be ample chance for all. If you live to get here you will see some of the best sport on wheels that the last ten years has disclosed. The club will be assisted by a committee of leading citizens who will see that everything is put on right up to the handle.

THE OUTLOOK.
As the 1st of July falls on a Friday, there is the advantage of practically three days for an outing. Friday can be given to the meet, and Saturday morning as well; Saturday afternoon will take the visitor to any of the popular resorts in the neighborhood where Sunday can be pleasantly passed. Early boats and trains will enable the visitor to reach home Monday morning in time for work.

THE ADZE SLIPPED

Mr. James Armstrong Works With a Bad Accident.
While engaged on the cribwork on the lower section of the canal Saturday morning, Mr. James Armstrong met with a somewhat serious accident. An adze with which he was working slipped from his stick of timber he was hewing, and, cutting deeply into his foot, severed an artery. Early boats and trains will enable the visitor to reach home Monday morning in time for work.

Of the House and Lot, property of Wm. Leach, 362 Hunter Street, will be offered for sale March the twenty-second, by auction. Intending purchasers may inspect the house and premises the day before, from two until four o'clock. The store between Mr. Stratton's and my fur store will also be offered for sale at the same time.

THE CHURCH AND THE BIBLE

Powerful Sermon by the Rev W. L. Armitage at All Saints Church

"What the Church Has and Yet Has Not in the Word of God." Sunday Schools a Necessary Evil—The Duty of Parents Towards Their Children

There was a very large congregation at All Saints' Church last evening when Rev. W. L. Armitage continued his series of sermons on "What the Church has and yet has not." Selecting as his text the words, "Ye have not His Word abiding in you" (St. John 5 ch. 38 v.), the preacher said that in speaking of the Word of God as belonging to the Church, and yet not possessed by the Church, there was a thought that might be dwelt upon which was emphasized by many of the Church members.

That the Church was above the Scriptures; that was that the Church had given the Scriptures, and therefore was the sole interpreter of those Scriptures. That was true, and yet it was not true. There were those who emphasized it most thoroughly that none should read the Scriptures except as interpreted by the Church. That would be well if it were so. But after all, we were free with the freedom with which Christ had made us free; and so it was that the Scriptures being the possession of the Church, we were also the possession of the whole body of the Church. To say that the Church was the sole interpreter in that she had given the Scriptures might lead some astray; and for this reason. It had been stated that the Church gave the Bible. But though the Church gave the book, God alone could give the inspiration. The Church gave the book, but God gave the revelation. The Church had been the preserver of it; but it was God's word, not the Church's word. It must not be thought that it was confined to certain members of the Church. No, not at all. It was theirs it was his, as members of that Church.

A FALSE IDEA
to represent the Church as summed up in the clergy. The clergy were Christians, but there were other Christians in the Church, and each will have one share of the Church's privileges. The preacher went on to show how the inspired Word of God had been conserved by the Church and handed down to us in its purity, and commented upon the fact that it had a good deal of criticism. It was still the best of books. The trouble to-day was that people were not honest enough in their convictions and that when they had attacked the Bible and found their attacks were in vain, they were not honest enough to confess that the great book still stood with undiminished power. If we wanted to know more of the love of God and the love which God would give to us and have us keep, we must find it from the Scriptures. "The words which I speak unto you," said our Master, "they are spirit and they are life." What did we find? Had the Church the Scriptures after all? No; she did not possess in her individual members the amount of the Scriptures that she might. People said it was very difficult with the competition of to-day to live the life of a Christian. In cases where work was not quite ready, it was necessary for a man to stand up and say that which he knew could not be fulfilled, and which he knew was not true? Not at all. He believed that the truth would bear far greater weight with a customer who knew that by waiting a little longer his commission would be completed when he called. He would be more confident, and that man would be more successful than the man who was often putting off his customers with insincere promises. He believed the Word of God was intended as the leader of our life and to be our guide in whatever we did.

TRIALS AND DIFFICULTIES
The Scriptures were a source of great value and comfort to us. Mr. Armitage proceeded to emphasize the importance of children being taught the Scriptures in their homes. He said Sunday Schools had become a necessary evil—a necessary evil because they took the children from the home, where they should be taught. Parents would say that the Word of God would not help their children in business. He told them that it would. He said that the greatest men who had gone forth into public life were men who knew their Bible from end to end. Above all things, a child should not be allowed to grow up in ignorance of the Scriptures (which spoke of the love of God and the life to come). People were carried away by a new doctrine, by every wind of doctrine that might appeal to their carnal nature at the time, simply because they did not know the Scriptures. At the Day of Judgment, it would not be asked of us, "Do you know the current writers of your age?" or "Do you know the masters of the classics?" The question would be, "Do you know the Word of God?" We should be judged according to the Word of God, which should be abiding in us. That Word should be our daily food. If we did not search the Scriptures, we should be fired with that zeal for God that love for Him, that should fit us for this life eternal.

The Campbellford Bridge
A deputation among whom was Warden Carlaw, the chairman of the Road and Bridge Committee, and the Commissioner of the Campbellford Service waited on the Campbellford Municipal Council in order to make arrangements for building the new walk on the recently constructed bridge. A resolution was passed to the effect that the Clerk of the municipality notify the City of Montreal that the Campbellford Council accented the proposition made by the County Council at their last session to pay one-third of the cost of the construction of the sidewalk.

A Valuable Medal
On Saturday Mr. Kelsay Hall purchased from a party in Montreal three medals two of them being given to the Nile veterans in 1884 and 1888 and the other a British Government one for the Battle of Chatteraugue, which took place in the war of 1812-14, and was given to Tiersman, a cousin of the warrior Chatteraugue. The latter medal is a silver one and is worth Mr. Hall says, about $85 on account of its rarity.

A NARROW SQUEAK

Family of Six Almost Suffocated to Death

An Escape of Gas Causes the Trouble. Two Doctors say the Family had a Close Call

Mr. Harry W. Gray and family, living on the corner of Harvey and Macdonald streets, were almost suffocated to death yesterday morning. It appears that the lid of a gas stove had by some means or other been shifted a little on one side, thereby allowing the gas to escape. When the members of the family appeared down stairs in the morning they experienced a suffocating sensation, and were seized with sickness. Directly Mr. Gray realized what was the trouble he opened all the windows and doors in the house, and soon obtained a supply of fresh air. Doctors Burnham and Clark were called in, and informed the family that they had a very narrow escape. Mrs. Gray, Miss Graham, a lady visitor, and one of the children were more seriously affected than the three remaining members of the household—Mr. Gray and two children—though it will be two or three days, we understand, before any of them will have thoroughly recovered from the effects of the gaseous fumes. When our representative called upon Mr. Gray last evening that gentleman said he was feeling pretty tough. Mr. Gray is at a loss to explain how the lid of the gas stove became displaced. He says the stove has been in use for eight years and he has never before had any trouble in connection with it.

OFF FOR THE KLONDIKE

Mr. George Dawson Recedes an Address and Presentation

At an oyster supper at McCullum's restaurant, Mr. George Dawson, who is off to the Klondike this week, was the guest of the evening, and was the recipient of the following address read by Mr. Ed. Cookson:

Peterborough, March 11, 1898.
George Dawson, Esq.:
Dear Friend.—It is with mixed feelings that we learn of your intended departure from Peterborough. We regret to learn that a tried friend and a whole-souled companion under all circumstances is about to leave us but yet we feel that with your ambitions a larger field than Peterborough is desirable in which to allow you more scope for your energy and ability.

In the far-off Klondike, where men of sterling character and straightforward business methods are needed, we feel sure that you will make your mark and by reflecting credit on your native town make amends to us for your absence, which we assure you will long cause a void in your large circle of friends.

The great West lies before you! Go forward and remember that our best wishes are attending you under all circumstances.

We ask your acceptance of this small token of our friendship.

Mr. Marvin Kennedy then presented Mr. Dawson with a handsome watch, and the recipient made an appropriate response.

EXPRESS OFF THE TRACK

The 1.18 p.m. West-bound Train Jumped the Rails
The O.P.R. west-bound express, due at Peterborough at 1.18 p.m., jumped the rails near Sharbot Lake Saturday morning. The four coaches of which the train was made up and also the tender were thrown off. The damp weather or an overflow of water is supposed to have caused the spreading of the rails and thus to have brought about the accident. No passengers were injured. Auxiliaries were immediately sent to the scene, one from Hawlock and the other from Smith's Falls, and cleared the track in the afternoon. The company made arrangements for the trans-shipment of the passengers on the 2.48 and 4.10 trains and ran down a special from this side, besides taking every means to secure their comfort.

LE FEMININE OBSERVER

Which is worst, a ladylike man or a gentlemanly woman?

Why is it that a six-footed woman always considers that her irresistible quality lies in her being kittenish?

The display of seeds of early planting makes one feel that the green grass will soon be growing all around.

Not one woman in ten can with ease go through the complications necessary in sending off a registered letter.

The person who never likes to work at any time finds the weather a particularly favorable excuse for shirking at this season.

With the tip-tilted hat, the aggressively high fur collar and the dark chif for veil the up-to-date woman is thoroughly disguised.

No matter how good the table d'hôte dinner may be a man considers it vile if he is not allowed to smoke when the coffee is served.

Any picture depicting scenes of war gather interested crowds at this time that would never have given them a glance six months ago.

It was a clever woman who remarked that she wasn't a bit superstitious, still she felt that the law of chance was certainly very curious.

The shirt waist of last season is made to do duty for early spring wear, while its owner gazes longingly at the wonderful silk conceits shown in the shop window.

It was a very practical little girl who informed her mother that no matter how lovely heaven might be she infinitely preferred staying here where she was better acquainted.

No rules can be laid down concerning those qualities that a woman finds most admirable in a man. It all depends on the particular traits in the particular man with whom she happens to be in love.

The penny-in-the-slot machine that tells your fortune as well as gives your correct weight is sought for by men as well as women, and the little printed slips are regarded as veritable oracles.

The latest method of removing ink stains is by the immediate application of dry salt before the ink has dried. When the salt becomes discolored by absorbing the ink, brush it off and apply more, wet slightly. Continue until the ink has disappeared.

Lemon, chives and parsley, with a trace of sweet oil, is the standard dressing for fish or broiled meats.

For brown grasses and sauces use flour browned in the oven that is well baked and soaked before using.

Carbonate of soda dissolved in water will remove mud stains from dresses. Lay the soiled part on the cloth and wash and rub the places with water, keeping the dress quite smooth.

To clean alabaster, apply fuller's earth, pipe clay or whiting for three or four hours, then wash off. If very dirty and stained, first wash with aqua-fortis diluted with water.

After using a silver fork for fish—especially anything strong smelling, like herring—the odor often clings to the silver, even after washing. To prevent this, directly after the fork has been used, wash it in warm water and then stand it in a basin of sea leaves for a few minutes.

Chamois skin, which has been so long employed as a useful article is now permitted to be ornamental. The skin is soft and pliable enough for needle-work and can also be painted upon yellow chamois skin makes a delightful sofa pillow and, stamped as a piece of cloth, it can be worked in washing silks. It will wash again and again if care is taken not to shrink the chamois. If the skin is painted it should be stretched on a drawing board during the process and left three days to dry. Finish the pillow with a silk frill of puffing to match the embroidery.

In the latest edge for centre pieces of doilies each scallop laps over the other at the ends, and each end is finished with a round dot.

Round or wreath effects are considered the most desirable designs for centre pieces. The pattern is no longer scattered, but bunched and jointed by spray so as to be connected all around. It is quite close to the outer edge also, leaving a large plain spot in the centre, so the floral piece will not hide the work.

Just at this season a great deal of ecclesiastical work is being done both in vestments and draperies. In either silk or linen the best results may be obtained by using the twisted embroidery floss. It is so slightly twisted and contains such a large proportion of silk that work done with it is unusually effective.

Colored linsens were never so much used for odd bits of fancy work as now. Table-covers, photograph frames, handkerchief cases, etc., are all considered smarter when made of the colored linsens. White silk is quite proper for embroidering them while others use several deeper shades of the self color. For anything that pertains to table garniture the dainty pure white linen is the only kind permissible.

Terry cloth makes a very satisfactory stuff for large pieces like screens, portieres, large pillows or table cloths.

There are any number of different kinds of silks, linsens and cottons for doing fancy work, each designed to obtain the best results for each special kind of work. The average amateur worker knows very little about many of them and absolutely nothing about others. A few questions at a reliable shop would in many instances make the work much easier, besides making the finished article entirely correct.

Centres of French knots will look much better if the petals are run quite to the centre, leaving no opening, and the French knots worked over them. The only exception to this suggestion is in the case of flowers with a very large centre.

four corners so that when the potatoes are put in the centre and the four corners folded over toward the centre.

the work will show in a mass in the centre.

The new Bulgarian embroidery has much to recommend it, especially for everyday wear. It is artistic, a charming medley of colors, and, while it does not soil readily, when it is washed it still retains all its freshness of color.

A charming bit done this winter by one of our society women at the weekly sessions of her "Current Events" was a table cover in a rich tint of gray linen. The outside edge was done in a vivid shade of turquoise blue, while in each corner was a striking conventional figure in reds, yellows, dull browns and faded purples.

Doilies in blossom effects make very dainty table accessories for decorating water bottles, pickle or olive dishes or any small table piece.

BACK FROM BERMUDA

REV. A. C. CREWS HAS SOMETHING TO SAY REGARDING HIS VISIT.

Rev. A. C. Crews, Superintendent of Epworth Leagues and Sunday Schools for the Methodist Church in Canada, has returned from the Bermudas, where he has been in behalf of the Nova Scotia Conference, to which the Methodists of Bermuda belong. The islands being purely tropical know no frost, and the change from Ontario was very marked when he went there about three weeks ago. The whole of the islands were in the height of tropical vegetation, magnificent roses were blooming and fruits ripening. The temperature was in the seventies, and on the coldest night only fell to 58. The people of the islands, who number about 15,000, chiefly raise onions, lily bulbs and potatoes.

"Bermuda is a magnificent winter resort," said Mr. Crews, "and hundreds of Americans and Canadians go there to escape our severe northern winters. The roads are a paradise for wheelmen, being as level as our asphalt pavements. The hotels do a large business during the winter, and are, as a rule, of very good quality. The principal attraction to the Canadian, besides the vegetation, is the floating dockyard, where Great Britain maintains a big naval station. There are at present ten warships there, comprising a portion of the North Atlantic squadron, and including the Renown."

Mr. Crews delivered seventeen addresses and visited all the Methodist churches, of which there are ten, besides one or two for the colored people. In each of these there is an Epworth League.

The Dog's Bark

As to barking, there are a great number of different sorts of barks, the meaning of each one of which is well known. For example, there is the barking which at night is meant to call master's attention to the fact that some burglar or other evildoer is hovering around the premises. When I hear my Landseer Newfoundland or my splendid St. Bernard giving warning in his way, I turn on my other side and do not sleep the sounder, well knowing that no evildoer would dare to enter my premises or even my grounds. Some years ago every house in Twynford was entered by burglars except my own. With families they had already opened a lower window of my villa, when they had to fly! The bark of warning was doubtless descended through long generations from the days when wild dogs hunted in packs, and it was then as useful in recalling stragglers as the bugle of a regiment.

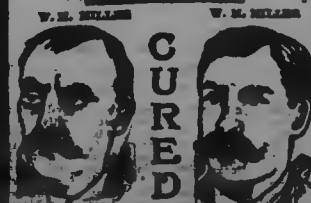

Next there is the bark of joy, when a dog, for instance, meets again a kind and loving master who may have been absent for a few days. No mistaking this. It is the bark of pleasure and excitement. Sometimes my beautiful St. Bernard, Fair Helen of Troy, mingles a little friendly scolding with this, for after licking my cheeks and ears she backs astern and with her head cocked funny to one side barks me a lecture. "Why didn't you take me with you?" she seems to say. "It was cruel, and I've been wretched all the time. But I'm happy now. Don't ever, ever leave your Helen again."—Gordon Stables in Our Animal Friends.

THE DRUMMOND DEAL

The Position of Mr. J. Israel

Tart in the Matter

NOT A BIT OF CORRUPTION

The Whole Affair is Explained by Mr. Blair

Blair

The Public Works Minister had Nothing to do With It. Mr. Blair's Statement Didn't know Who Owned the Road. The Best Route.

(Special to the Times.)

Ottawa, March 15.—A meeting of the committee appointed to enquire into the Drummond County Railway affair was held this forenoon. Mr. Lister occupied the chair. All the members of the committee were present.

The others present were J. N. Greenhalgh and Mr. J. Wainwright, assistant general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, and Hon. J. I. Tarte.

The chairman read a letter from Mr. Mechin, Assistant Treasurer of Quebec, forwarding the amount of subsidies and land grants given to the Drummond County Railway. Mr. Mechin said that this was all the information the department had in connection with the matter, and it would not be necessary for him to come to Ottawa.

MR. BLAIR'S STATEMENT.

Mr. Blair was then sworn and gave a statement. After the summer session of 1896, Mr. Blair said he turned his attention to the question of extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. He was not invited to do this, either by the Grand Trunk or the Drummond County Railway. He came to the conclusion that it would be in the interests of the Intercolonial road to have a terminus in Montreal. The views he entertained on the subject he first laid before his colleagues. He found they were well disposed toward the idea. He went then to the middle of November he put himself in communication with Mr. Wainwright. Mr. Wainwright and the Minister talked the matter over, and the former afterwards laid the subject before the Grand Trunk. That was all the progress that had been made before Mr. Blair left for the Pacific Coast about the end of December.

DIDN'T KNOW WHO OWNED IT.

When he returned in January he resumed his negotiations. It was not until that time that he knew who owned the road. Mr. Blair said he was not aware that Mr. Greenhalgh was largely interested in the road. In talking the matter over with Mr. Blair, Mr. S. Schreiber informed him that the late Government had been negotiating for the purchase of the Drummond County road, and he (S. Schreiber) had prepared an estimate, which was read at the last meeting.

Mr. Blair said he knew that he looked over the three routes. There was, in the first place, the purchasing of that portion of the road from Richmond to Chaudiere Junction, which would cost about $2,500,000, and then there was the acquiring of running rights from St. Boniface to St. Roseville, Richmond, and altogether his enquiry into this route was not a satisfactory one. There was also the south shore route. An estimate made by Mr. Kingsford, C.E., showed that it would cost $23,000 per mile to build the south shore road, and the Life Co. who owned the Drummond road which had to be built.

THE BEST ROUTE.

After going into all the routes, he decided to negotiate for the Drummond County road. He proceeded at length to show what had been done in the way of construction, etc., and said that the 43 miles which had to be built were now completed, and it was more than up to the standard of the Intercolonial. There were some small things, such as completion of culverts which would cost a few thousand dollars, and which had not yet been finished, and on that account the subsidy was not paid.

THE PURCHASE PRICE.

Mr. Blair then read an agreement which had been entered into by the Drummond County road to accept $1,600,000 from the Government for it, after $800,000 had been expended out of this amount to improve it, instead of a rental of $70,000 a year, as formerly arranged.

In regard to the arrangements for the Grand Trunk, Mr. Blair showed that what that company wanted for running over their road from St. Boniface to Montreal, including terminal and other facilities was $156,000. The amount was reduced afterwards to $140,000.

MR. TARTE NOT IN IT.

Mr. Blair, in conclusion, said that he wanted to state that he, and he alone, negotiated the transaction with the Drummond County road, from the beginning to the end, with Mr. Greenhalgh. There was no other member of the negotiations. On one occasion Mr. Mitchell spoke to him along with Mr. Greenhalgh. From time to time he (Blair) communicated with his colleagues. The Drummond County wanted a rental of $100,000, and figures were produced to show that.

A good deal had been said in the press and elsewhere about corruption in connection with the matter, but, as far as he was concerned, he knew of no collection of contribution in any shape or form which had been made for political or other purposes. Nothing of that kind ever took place between himself and Mr. Greenhalgh.

POWELL CALLED DOWN.

Mr. Powell—Coming back to facts. Mr. Blair—I want that statement withdrawn.

Mr. Powell explained that he did not mean to discredit what Mr. Blair said, but merely to come back to what was material, etc.

Vermont Business Men Make a Demand for Reciprocity With Canada

Following Boston's Example Resolution Passed by the Board of Trade of Montpelier, the Capital

Special to the Times.

Montpelier, Vermont, March 15.—The Board of Trade of this city has endorsed the resolution passed by the Boston Chamber of Commerce in favor of reciprocity with Canada, as follows:

Whereas after thirty years of anxious hope for a revival of reciprocal relations with the Dominion of Canada and the Crown Colony of Newfoundland, and, believing most thoroughly that reciprocal relations are decidedly for the best interests of New England and the entire United States; and

Whereas, we, the Montpelier Board of Trade, feel the great necessity for the development of our natural resources that we may realize larger and more prosperous business relations with the territory immediately adjoining our own; therefore

Resolved, That we respectfully represent to the President of the United States the great value to commercial interests of a treaty of reciprocity with the Dominion of Canada and the Crown Colony of Newfoundland, and earnestly petition that such a treaty be negotiated as soon as possible.

DISTRICT JAILS

IMPORTANT PRISON REFORM DECIDED UPON THE ONTARIO GOVERNMENT.

(Special to the Times.)

The Ontario Government will soon inaugurate a change in the system of jails which will no doubt meet with the approval of every one interested in that kind of work.

The intention is to have district jails instead of county jails. Then the expense would be much less, the discipline would be very much better, and generally a great improvement would be the effect.

At the last session of the Legislature a bill was passed which permitted counties under some circumstances to do away with jails. These circumstances have not come about yet.

At the last session of the Legislature a bill will be introduced which will go further still, and in a very short time the county jail will be transformed in the district jail.

BOARD OF TRADE MEETING

The Annual Meeting Took Place Last Night

Election of Officers—The Nickel Question—Toronto and the Bell Telephone Company

The annual meeting of the Board of Trade was held in the Council Chamber last evening, when the attendance of members included Messrs. John Carnegie, President, Hay, J. J. McBain, W. H. Burnham, Shortly, Matthews, Kells, Munson, R. Fair, W. H. Hill, Jos. Kendrick, M. P. Cahill, Eastwood, and H. S. Macdonald, secretary and treasurer.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The following report was presented by Mr. Macdonald and read by the Chairman:

Mr. President and Gentlemen:

In making the ninth annual report of the Secretary of the Board of Trade, I have much pleasure in saying that the hopes of those who have occupied my position in preceding years have been in a large measure fulfilled, and that the interest of the members, as well as the subjects under discussion, have shown a distinct advance in the scope and growth of the Board of Trade.

During the year 1897 the members on roll have numbered 93, being an increase of 18 over 1896. Of these 81 have paid the membership fee to date.

The number of meetings held was determined by the importance of the subjects at issue. It was considered advisable, beside holding the quarterly meetings provided for by the by-law, to call general meetings when necessary. The result is that these meetings were almost largely attended, and a great deal of interest was shown in the discussion of the questions of the evening.

Outside of the general meetings, there were two special features of note: one being the illustrated lecture of Mr. R. C. Rogers, C.E., which was not only entertaining but decidedly instructive; and the other was the visit of the delegation to Ottawa re the Trent Valley Railway. The Board decided to give an excursion in connection with the visit, and the financial result of it to the Board was an increase in the funds by $7.47.

Notwithstanding the fact that the general verdict is that the Board has during the past year fully served its purpose in the public interest, it cannot be denied that some of the merchants have not contributed to this the only real medium in the town and county for making known the opinions of business and professional men—and use it for the purposes, not only of discussion but as a basis of united action. I do not take the matter up with the idea of magnifying any complaint, but more as a humble request to those gentlemen that in the future they join with the others in their interest in the commercial welfare of the town. It would be to the advantage of the younger men of the town, and in the future interests of the town itself, if those young men who have not joined the Board did so. Many of the questions of vital interest to the town are first broached here; and the information arising from the meeting together with the views of the members is put in our power or later to be of great use and advantage to the town. By taking note of the information and the discussion attending it, young men who are to be the men of the future may render themselves most useful to the members of the different councils and boards of management.

During the year a number of letters have been written in the interest of the Board's business to manufacturers looking for locations.

It is now to refer to the great loss during the year of two well-known gentlemen—Mr. F. J. Rogers, late Manager of the Bank of Montreal, and Mr. R. O. Hamilton, of the P. Hamilton Manufacturing Company.

The treasurer's statement which will be submitted to you shows the Board to be in a prosperous condition financially.

The thanks of the Board are due to the Town Council and reporters who have been most faithful in the endeavor to further the interests of the Board. I would suggest that some more tangible form of remuneration than the usual vote of thanks be tendered them.

Your obedient servant,

H. S. MACDONALD.

Mr. Manson moved the adoption of the report.

Mr. Hay seconded the proposition, which was agreed to.

Mr. Matthews asked if the question of the remuneration of the secretary and treasurer was included in the report.

Mr. Macdonald replied that it was not, and added that he desired no reward.

Mr. Fair said that no wage subject had been brought up, he should like to move that in acknowledgment of Mr. Macdonald's first-class services the sum of $50 be voted him. (Applause.) They had in their secretary an efficient officer, and when they received good services they ought to acknowledge the fact.

Mr. Shortly seconded the proposition which was carried by acclamation.

Mr. Macdonald, in returning thanks, said he would have preferred not to have been voted anything. It had been a pleasure to him to work with the gentleman he had had to work with. He had learnt considerable since he had been secretary—sufficient to remunerate him.

Mr. Fair: You have learnt a good deal of work.

THE RULING OF THE WAVES

Never before in the history of mankind were preparations for war proceeding on so huge a scale as at present. The fever seems to have seized nearly all the nations of both hemispheres, and it is a noteworthy fact that in every case the greatest activity is directed toward an increase in the naval forces. Great Britain leads off with a budget providing for the expenditure of the colossal sum of $127,750,000 during the current year for the maintenance and augmentation of her naval strength. The German naval budget as presented to the Reichstag by the Government requires the extraordinary grant of $95,000,000, to be used in increasing the strength of the German fleet until it shall include nineteen battleships besides the gunboats and torpedo vessels. This grant is demanded above and beyond the ordinary expenditures for repairs of all kinds to ships, docks and guns and for ammunition and the maintenance of the personnel of the fleet. The Czar has decreed the outlay of about $70,000,000 from the Imperial Treasury for new constructions. Japan has recently added four battleships to her navy, while ten other armored ships of 9000 tons or more displacement each are building in her own yards and in those of the principal maritime nations. And lastly the American Congress has placed $50,000,000 at the disposal of the Administration as an emergency fund to place the country in a thorough state of defense, while Spanish agents are in open competition with the representatives of the United States in foreign markets as probable purchasers of available naval vessels and war materials.

The French budget can only be explained by an expert in the solution of puzzles. A programme was adopted several years ago providing for the completion within eight years of ten battle-ships, at a total cost of $52,500,000. That section of the French navy which prefers swift and rather lightly armored cruisers to the ponderous steel-clad ships of the line seems to have gained the ascendancy in France, and only $250,000 is to be expended this year on the single battleship, the construction of which has been authorized by the Chamber of Deputies. Nevertheless, the outlay for new constructions provided in the French naval budget for 1898 amounts to $6,250,000.

Notwithstanding the apparent unpopularity of the battleship among French naval officers, this type of vessel is considered as the main reliance in battle in every other important navy. Captain Mahan has described the battleships as the infantry of the sea—meaning that they constitute the real strength of a fleet and the force by which battles are decided. All other types of war ships are auxiliaries, though as indispensable in a navy as are cavalry and artillery in an army. The controversy between the advocates of heavy and powerful armorclads and the partisans of lighter and swifter vessels will probably continue to rage until it shall have been settled in the school of experience. These conclusions may be confidently drawn, however, from the stupendousness and the universality of the preparations for naval warfare now in progress: The decisive battles in the future history of the world will be fought on the sea; and the nations possessed of the greatest sea power will dominate the world. It will be a long time before Britannia ceases to rule the waves.

ed the meeting to let Toronto take care of itself. It was not advisable that Peterborough should antagonize the company.

On the proposition of Mr. Fair, seconded by Mr. Kendrie, it was decided to forward the petition, Messrs. Kells, Cahill and Knappman voted against the resolution.

Mr. Fair then proposed that the man who had been engaged to collect signatures to the petition should be paid $4. This was seconded by Mr. Hall and carried with three dissentients after a jocular amendment—moved by Mr. Cahill and seconded by Mr. Kells, that another man should be paid $4 for collecting signatures to a counter petition—had been defeated.

THE YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Mr. Burnham remarked that he noticed that the Town Council had shelved for the present the petition of the Young Women's Christian Association asking from exemption from taxation. It had been said that the fact of the association taking boarders constituted them competitors with the boarding houses of the town. A similar argument might be applied with regard to the Young Men's Christian Association because they had barbers and might be said to be driving the barbers out of the town. (Laughter.) With all due respect to the Council, inasmuch as the Y.W.C.A. is an absolute necessity in the town, and as the men had taken precious good care of themselves and let the women go rip (laughter), he should like to move a resolution favoring the exemption of the association from taxes, and authorizing the secretary to respectfully lay the resolution before the Town Council.

Mr. Fair seconded.

It was pointed out that the resolution scarcely came within the province of the Board of Trade, and Mr. Burnham withdrew it, remarking that he would rather subscribe a few dollars himself towards pay the Y.W.C.A. taxes. (Hear hear.)

MISCELLANEOUS.

A letter was read from Mr. Joseph Pope, Under-Secretary of State, acknowledging the receipt of a resolution passed by the Peterborough Board of Trade for submission to His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, in the matter of Canadian rights in international dealings with the United States.

It was understood that a special meeting would be called at a later date with a view to the discussion of the proposed Street Railway Company's scheme. The meeting adjourned at 10 o'clock.

THEY ARE LOYAL

BUT WILL PARADE ON ST. PATRICK'S DAY IN CELEBRATION OF THE 1798 INSURRECTION.

(Special to the Times.) Quebec, March 15.—A few days ago a number of young Irishmen, unidentified with any of the existing organizations, formed themselves into a club, to which they gave the name of "The Club of '98." The idea was to take part in the parade on St. Patrick's Day, but as soon as the news of the formation of the new club reached the ears of Father Rosbach, of St. Patrick's Church, he forbade the new club to participate in Thursday's procession.

Then, for a while, it seemed as if there would be no procession at all, the members of other societies saying they would not walk if the new club was not allowed. Finally the priest stated that his instructions came from the highest ecclesiastical authority.

Yesterday the members of the Club of '98 waited upon Mr. Begin, and secured his endorsement but not until they should completely satisfy him about their club, and that they were as loyal to British institutions as he could desire.

LIQUEFIED AIR

Discovery Second Only to the X-Ray

Success in Experiment of a New York Man
Who is Scientist of "Thursdays" Proves so and can Drive Nails with it

From the Brooklyn Eagle.
The first public exhibition of the phenomena of liquid air was given this afternoon at Adelphi College in the lecture room of Prof. W. C. Peckham and the results of the various experiments were more startling and novel than those few scientists who had been informed of the discovery expected. Although for several weeks it has been known that this discovery was made the find has been kept quiet, and not until the experiments this afternoon were the full results made known.

I regard this second only to the discovery of the X-ray," said Prof. Peckham. "It is one of the marvelous scientific achievements of this end of the nineteenth century."
This discovery of this method of the liquefaction of air was made by T. C. Tripler of Manhattan from whom Prof. Peckham obtained his materials, having been familiar with the attempts and learning of the successful discovery almost as soon as it was made. Mr. Tripler is a wealthy scientist, who has been delving in chemistry and physics mainly for pleasure, and whose stable on Fifth Avenue has been converted into a laboratory, where many of his tests are made. In this discovery of the liquefaction of air he used a 40-horsepower engine. The classes at Adelphi and those who had been invited by Prof. Peckham were amazed at the exhibition. In one instance the professor appeared absolutely to freeze a fire. He explained that the crystals came from the escaping carbon dioxide coming in contact with the cold of the liquid air. The professor had obtained several gallons of this air, which were brought into his glass room at 2.45 o'clock, the time set for the lecture.

He explained that the process by which it was made was in the manner like that used in the manufacture of ice in the skating rinks and other places where artificial cold had to be developed. For many years, he said, men had been searching for the absolute zero. Scientists had been on this hunt with as much eagerness as explorers had been searching for the North Pole. The announcement had been made that at 273 degrees, Centigrade, below zero, all heat would cease—this was 460 Fahrenheit heat. Now about 330 degrees in liquid oxygen had been reached. The first scientists who liquefied oxygen did so at a cost of $2,500 a quart. Charles E. Tripler had recently discovered a method to produce it at a nominal cost with a 40-horsepower engine. He could make from two to three gallons every hour. The process consisted in compressing air three times in succession to 60, 300 and 2,000 pounds to the square inch and cooling it each time by passing cold water over the pipes in which it was contained. Then the air was allowed to escape in a jet from the end of the pipe in which it was under pressure and allowed to expand. It passes along, back over and around the pipe through which it has come. This produces an intense cooling of the gas in the inner pipe. This expansion repeated three times over cools the air below the point of liquefaction and it ceases to be a gas and becomes a liquid. (Un this form it may be drawn out in pipes and can be handled as easily as water. As soon as it comes out it begins to boil violently until the air about it is frozen and cooled, then it ceases to boil.)

After exhibiting the liquefied air, telling how it was made and describing its qualities, Prof. Peckham entered upon a series of most singular experiments. Those present witnessed the novel sight of a mercury hammer. The professor took a handful of fluid mercury and placed it in a kind of mold. This was poured into a pot of liquid air, and before it became hard a stick or iron was inserted in the mercury. In a moment the professor drew out what appeared to be a hammer with a silver tip. The mercury had become frozen so hard that a nail could be driven with it.

A minute test was the apparent freezing of the fire. A quantity of liquid air was placed in a teakettle and the top was placed on. In a few moments the air began to evaporate and the moisture shot out of the stem of the kettle to a great height. The kettle was then placed on a coal fire and the violence of the boilings began to increase. The professor poured a tumblerful of water into the kettle and in three minutes, although the kettle was over a red-hot fire, took out the water in the shape of a large phoe of ice. In the meantime the kettle had become covered with ice from the freezing of moisture in the air, and on lifting it from the fire, instead of soot was a thick layer of hair frost from the carbonic acid of the fire, freezing as it escaped.

A number of other strange tests followed. By pouring a few drops of liquid air in a tumblerful of whiskey, the whiskey was soon frozen. A tube of liquid air was lowered into a pitcher of water and very shortly a bulb of ice was formed on the lower end of the tube as big as the tube. This was slipped off and held in the hand. Liquid air was poured into it as if it was a goblet. A match was placed in and began to burn with great violence. The nitrogen of the air boiled at ten degrees and escaped so that the liquid oxygen was left. Prof. Peckham explained that all experiments with liquid oxygen could be made with this.

"I regard this as a great scientific achievement," said Prof. Peckham. "As I have said, next to the discovery of the X-ray will come the discovery of the liquefaction of air. It means a great deal in a practical way for the production of cold. This is the first time a public experiment has been made. Mr. Tripler shipped some liquid air to Philadelphia and some to the departments at Washington. Further than this I know of no other tests that have been made. As soon as I heard it, I knew that it was distinctly new and made the effort to secure the liquid air with which I have given this exhibition."

The spring instant shows that most convincingly in tops and shipping ropes.

A FLAMING SWORD

New York's Aerial Phenomenon Discussed by a Scientist

Superstitions People Say It Was a Sign of War—Comets that Have Not Nations Almost Crazy With Fright

"Scratch a Russian and you'll find a Tartar," is a well known proverb. The appearance of a flaming sword in the heavens over New York city on Monday night, as related in The Journal, and which is a sign of war, impels me to improve the proverb, thus: "Scratch civilized man and you'll find a savage." But you must scratch him in the right place. His superstition, for example, the old education of the early ages, and his gentleness, mercy and even his good manners will disappear like the dew and you have him as in the days of the Caesars. Wisdom, learning and "common-sense," improperly so-called, are no guarantee of freedom from this pagan thrall. That such famous writers, scholars and philosophers as Herodotus, Pliny, Seneca, Suetonius Josephus and others believed that the entrails of animals, the flight of birds, eclipses and comets denote Divine will and purpose is astonishing.

Suetonius gravely relates that after Caesar's death "a comet blazed seven days together and it was supposed to be the soul of Caesar now received into heaven, for which reason he is represented on his statue with a star on his brow." He also says that for eight months before the death of Domitian there was constant lightning at Rome, and that the emperor the day previous to his death said "to-morrow the moon will be in Aquarius, but will be bloody instead of watery, for an event will happen which will be spoken of by the world." He further informs us that a comet appeared above the horizon before the death of Nero. Philo Judeus, the Jewish writer in the times of the Apostles, says "an eclipse of the sun denotes the death of a king or the destruction of some city."

Those popular superstitions were utilized by the crafty and ambitious to attain supreme power. Julius Caesar "was never deterred from any enterprise not retarded in the prosecution of it by religion," that is by the omens being unfavorable, says Suetonius, but he was an adept at playing on the popular prejudice. He ordered a palm to be cut down as an omen of victory, but a sucker grew from the root, which in a few days was so great that wild pigeons, also birds of omen, nested in its branches, which meant the speedy rise of the great Roman to imperial supremacy.

His successors were similarly favored. Vespasian knew he was to become emperor for a cypress tree was blown down when there was no wind, but next day it rose stronger and greener than ever. One day while he was at dinner "a strange dog that wandered about the streets brought a man's hand and laid it under the table," for a hand meant sovereign power, and was borne upon a staff among the standards of the armies. Similarly when Constantine the Great had determined to adopt Christianity as the national religion, he saw a cross in the heavens on which was written a Latin sentence meaning, "under this sign thou shalt conquer." We have outgrown the old tree worship and science has knocked the bottom out of the old belief that extraordinary celestial phenomena are portents of evil. The comet has the greatest staying powers and is the last to leave us. The celebrated Bayeux tapestry speaking of the comet B.C. 48 says "We have in the war between Caesar and Pompey an example of the terrible effects which follow the apparition of a comet." Lucan says "the darkest nights were made light, for the comet—that dreadful star—which overthrows the powers of the earth, showed its terrible countenance."

From the death of Atilla till the close of the 17th century, history is full of accounts of the death of emperors and kings, foretold by the appearance of those celestial visitors, a list which is invaluable to science by giving their dates. In the year 1066 William Duke of Normandy invaded England at the moment Halley's comet appeared in the heavens, which meant the defeat of the English at Hastings. The church held the popular view "Heaven art thou," said the Monk of Malmesbury, addressing the comet, "source of the tears of many mothers. Long have I seen thee but now thou appearest to me more terrible for thou dost threaten my country with complete ruin." The celebrated Bayeux tapestry made by Queen Matilda, wife of William, now king, which is still preserved, represents the people gazing at the heavenly visitor.

In the year 1000 when the end of the world was confidently expected, a comet was visible for nine days. A writer who saw it says: "Such was its light that it frightened not only those who were in the open country but those who were within doors. It had the form of a dragon, whose feet were blue and whose hands seemed to continually increase."

The great comet of 1182 is thus described by Nicetas, the historian: "A comet appeared in the heavens similar to a writhing serpent. Sometimes it extended itself, sometimes it drew itself in and sometimes it opened a huge mouth. It seemed as if thirsting for human blood and on the point of satisfying itself."

Some swords looked like a sword and of course meant war. Josephus says that in the year A.D. 69 several prodigies announced the destruction of Jerusalem, "amongst other warnings a comet, one of the kind called xiphias because their tails appear to represent the blade of a sword was seen above the city for the space of a whole year."

After seeing the moonlight stream through some clouds and resemble a sword if a comet were to appear at this time over New York what a panic there would be on the stock exchange and in the White House. But the sword over New York is not the sword of Spain. It appeared immediately after the Senate passed the resolution not to give Canada the bonding privileges at Wrangel. We promise them immunity for all danger if they will cease their wickedness and permit our goods to enter free of duty into the Klondike.

TALES OF THE TIMES

Foreigners have sometimes commented on the fact that all American warships are painted white. Few nations have any particular color prescribed for their vessels of war, nor did the United States prior to the civil war. Their warships in the old navy were, like most of those of other countries, black or very dark in color. The change was by no means a fanciful one, but was the result of experience gained during the war. The Southern blockade runners, gunboats, etc., were all of a dull white color, and it was discovered that this alone enabled them to run the gauntlet in the dark, where a black hull would have been sure of detection. In fact, there is no color that looks up more conspicuously on the water at night than black. But in case of war the ships would not remain the brilliant white beauties that they are now. A coat of paint would be added which would transform them into almost a lead colored hue, as were the old Southern blockade runners. Of course, they would not be quite so stylish and pretty as they are now, but it would destroy the shining mark they now present to an enemy's gun by day, and by night it would render them almost invisible.

A paragraph in a Southern paper announcing the marriage of Ezekiah Hardy and Mary Anderson is uninteresting enough in itself, to be sure, but thereby hangs a tale, and there is in the interest. Last fall a tramp applied for and received work in one of the brickyards out in the suburbs. It may be guessed that he was not an ordinary tramp, by his applying for work. But there were other particulars which distinguished him from ordinary members of the fraternity and aroused the interest of the manager of the yard. Ezekiah, for that was his name, was cleanly, sober, frugal and industrious. After working in the yard for a month he departed with a flour sack full of provisions which he had cooked himself.

He left the manager a tale which entitled Ezekiah to rank very closely to the faithful Jacob of old. Old Mr. Sanderson was a New Hampshire farmer, blessed in the possession of numerous hills and vales and herds of cattle and a pretty daughter. Ezekiah was the hired man, whose duty at first was feeding the cattle and cultivating the farm and a little later, according to his own ideas of it—courting the pretty daughter. When the old farmer discovered this phase of the case he remonstrated with the young lady, and finding her by no means indifferent to the attentions of her admirer, he paid Ezekiah, and notified him that his services were no longer needed. But if he supposed that the enamored hired man would thus lightly break the bonds that held him to the farm, he reckoned without his host. His wages stopped, but so also did not Ezekiah. He went right on feeding the cows and courting Mary. What transpired during the troublous period that followed was too lengthy and thrilling to narrate. Many a time and oft was he kicked down the paternal steps, and on at least two occasions did he hear the faithful watch dog bay a deep mouthful of welcome as that faithful animal sampled the posterior of the lover's trousers in the mad race down the green lane. But, despite the old gentleman's faults, Ezekiah loved the daughter still, and persisted in not regarding these slight discourtesies as sufficient cause to suspend diplomatic relations. At last, driven to despair, the old man sold his farm and moved to Georgia. That was a sad blow to Ezekiah, for the distance was great and he had not the means of warping pushing the campaign, even in a second-class coach. But the spirit that had borne up against the terrors of the past quailed not at the difficulties of the future. By his valor he would walk, and walk he did, stopping to work at odd jobs only long enough to procure the means of pushing on to the front. What happened when he entered the Sanderson homestead, but, doubtless, the despair of the old farmer was complete, and fully realizing that an escape to Australia would afford only temporary relief, he surrendered at discretion.

FRILLS OF FASHION

NOVELTIES THAT ARE APPEARING WITH THE SPRING WEATHER.

Black poppies, roses and violets are the prevailing blossoms in the new spring hats.

A most alluring puff of lorgnette chain has this time appeared, clear, alternating with double groups of emerald green moire ribbon, each link of ribbon and jewels being equal in length.

Black and white effects are largely in evidence this spring, both in utility costumes and headwear, and in elaborate evening toilettes in which silk, brocade, net, lace, chiffon and very handsome jet garniture are united.

It is a conservative estimate to say that two-thirds of the feminine world wears a bow under its chin. A dashing little French bow made in two loops—no more appearing—of tulle, or chiffon, or tulle that is accented-plaited, is especially stylish.

French mohair retains all its acquired popularity for certain uses in the world of fashion, and among other spring materials are found some novel and pretty varieties in serge, anise, basket, tulle and whiplash weaves many stylish patterns, and also very handsome colorings.

All sorts of ruffling for trimming summer gowns and evening dresses can be bought in the shops all ready for use. It comes in Liberty gauze, chiffon and lace all finished on the edge with rows of narrow gathered satin ribbon, a little ruche of chiffon, a tiny border of flowers, or frills of narrow lace.

Transparent poplins, with a satin sheen upon them, which seems to have imprisoned the sunbeams, are a rival to a similar stuff with a pinked weaving, which shows a great tenacity of thread and is admirable for draping over satin—for we are coming to draped dresses and must be prepared for them.

The latest effort of Parisian invention is a transparent black-lined fabric, which in color and appearance is made to represent stained glass. It is perfectly harmonious in coloring and has a lightly woven cloud-like design in black all over it. It will be employed for bodices and for fronts of dresses blended with self-color.

BACK FROM KLONDIKE

Frank P. Slavin, the Ex Pugilist, is in Montreal

Will Return to the Golden North at the End of the Month—He Relates Some of His Experiences—The Great Wealth of the Yukon Country

"Frank P. Slavin, Dawson City," pronounced the register at the Windsor Hotel last evening. It was the same Frank P. Slavin who used to register from Australia, and who knocked a fairly good livelihood out of his pugilistic fists within the roped arena. As a pugilist Slavin needs no introduction but as a Klondiker he is not so well known. Despite the comparative oblivion of the past year, however, he himself says its away ahead of fighting.

Mr. Slavin was a conspicuous figure in the rotunda of the Windsor last evening. His height and general physique are commanding in themselves, and when these are encased in a sort of bicycle suit, with knickerbockers and stockings and a slouch hat, in the middle of winter it was not strange that he attracted some attention.

It was in June of last year that Mr. Slavin turned his back on the world of Corbett and Fitzsimmons, of Sharkey and of Choyinski, and set his face Klondikewards. He was accompanied by his old manager, J. W. Boyle, and Harry Shaw, of England. Since then the three have been staking out claims and digging down into the frozen sands and laying up treasure for themselves generally. They are now in Montreal for the purpose of obtaining further supplies of clothing and provisions, and return northward almost immediately.

Dawson City as described by Mr. Slavin and Mr. Boyle, is not at all the kind of place, at least in winter, that most people probably imagine it. During the winter they say that place is almost completely depopulated by the miners and prospectors going out into the outlying country to mine their claims or search for new ones. Contrary to the general assumption of those who are ignorant of the conditions of the country, the most of the mining is done in the winter time. In the summer about a foot of the top of the soil becomes thawed out, the remainder continuing frozen right down to the bed rock. The moisture oozing out from this thawed out top crust runs into the miner's excavation, and makes the work of placer mining in summer almost impossible.

During the winter, therefore, the miners attend strictly to business, and Dawson City sees little of them. But when the summer comes, and the miners knock off for a couple of months' holidays, more or less, then Dawson City sees revelry by night and day both.

Mr. Slavin is very sceptical of the possibilities of the Edmonton route. Both he and Mr. Boyle say that the reputation of the Klondike will not be very materially increased by the numbers who started in from Edmonton through the gold fields. They may get through they say, but in order to do so they will be obliged to abandon the greater portion of their outfit and provisions.

The route they described as one almost entirely unexplored, the impracticable nature of which is recognized by all who have traveled over portions of it.

Mr. Slavin is an old-time miner. When he was out in Australia, before he came to this country, he alternated his little diversion of licking other people with mining and prospecting in the gold fields of that island continent.

During the past year he has travelled over so many miles of the Klondike and Indian River districts in the Yukon as any other man living. Mr. Slavin himself says so, and it takes a husky man to successfully contradict him. His map of those districts is used by the gold commissioner at Dawson.

Mr. Boyle who accompanies him, and who was formerly his manager in the prize-fighting business has made a reputation for himself as one of the most daring frontiersmen of the Yukon. When everyone had turned back from the summit of the White Pass last autumn, he pushed on alone and picked out a route to the lakes. Coming out again, he was chosen captain of an expedition at Carusack's post, on the Yukon river, 270 miles above Dawson, and although old timers pronounced the trip an impossible one in winter, brought his men through without an accident.

Both Mr. Slavin and Mr. Boyle are enthusiastic in their accounts of the great wealth of the Yukon country. They sail from Vancouver on their return to Dawson City on March 31, taking with them twenty tons of supplies most of which will be obtained in this city.

It is a rarity to meet a woman who works whose parents at one time were not wealthy beyond the dreams of avarice.

It has never been decided when they meet which is the more frightened, woman or the mouse.

The very correct man will wear only shirts with cuffs attached, this being an unwritten law with the well-groomed individual who does not have to save in laundry bills by putting french cuffs on a day or two old shirts.

The Dipper or the Dropper?

There are cough medicines that are taken as freely as a drink of water from a dipper. They are cheap medicines. Quantity does not make up for quality. It's the quality that cures. There's one medicine that's dropped, not dipped—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. There's more power in drops of this remedy than in dipperful of cheap cough syrups and elixirs. It cures Bronchitis, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, and all Colds, Coughs, and affections of the Throat and Lungs.

THE-FEMININE OBSERVER

A deep rich yellow called burnt orange is a favorite shade this spring.

A picturesque new shape is called the torseador. The bold and distinct lines of the Spanish brim is its salient feature.

French amethysts, set in filigree gilt, are dainty and fashionable ornaments for evening hats.

The reign of ostrich tips will continue through the spring and summer. The broad-brimmed black straw hat will be surmounted usually by several of them.

Many of the newest shapes have dome-shaped crowns and short-backed brims.

Picture hats are not as popular as toques or capotes. The most pleasing thing about the latter is the novel effects in the roll-like bordering that finishes the brim. This style of trimming is apt to give a heavy appearance to a summer hat, but it is becoming and strictly correct, nevertheless.

Flower crowns are the top notch of vogue. Roses and violets are the most favored flowers for these.

The top-heavy trimming effects of the winter will be conspicuous by their absence.

Roguettes will be more lavishly used as garniture than ever. The smartest ones are made of satin, doubled, with a cord shirred into the outer edge.

On the most fashionable hats only one or two colors are used, although on some two or three shades of one color were observed.

Steel and gilt ornaments are not considered as modish as the cut-jet. Rhinestones are only permissible for evening wear, and even then they must be used sparingly, as too many of them look gaudy and crude.

An odd and pretty fancy around a crown of sienna brown was three rows of amber beads.

Plaid ribbons and velvets are quite passe for millinery.

The sailor shape, both trimmed and untrimmed, save for the ribbon band, will be just as prominent a head covering this season as heretofore.

The edict of Dame Fashion for this summer is that all the blossoms for hat trimming shall be small, so the bysinech, lilac, violet and tiny rosebud will be used extensively.

The very much beruffled skirt is lovely in the ball room or carriage, but it looks woefully out of place on the street.

When men are so used to women that are flippancy and frothy that when they get hold of a really honest one they do not know how to treat her.

OFF FOR THE KLONDIKE

Lakefield Sends a Contingent to Look for Gold

Yesterday morning ten young fellows left Lakefield en route for the west, and passed through Peterborough on the 2:48 express. One party is known as the Strickland party. It consists of Messrs. G. A. Strickland, C. Strickland, G. Benson, G. Postlewaite and G. A. Baple. They are all gold hunters bound for the Klondike. They travel by C. P. R. to Vancouver, thence to the Yukon by way of Fort Wrangel and the White Pass. They have outfit fitted at Victoria and are well prepared for a long stay. Lakefield turned out en masse and gave them a hearty send-off. There was an immense gathering of their friends on the platform of the station and the employees of the Strickland and Co. marched down with a Union Jack at the head to cheer them. The best wishes of the friends of the party go with them in their venture and hope for their return loaded with gold nuggets. The Strickland party were at the Snowden house today.

Besides the party here are Messrs. Herb. McIlmoyl, Z. McIlmoyl and G. Hendren. Messrs. Chas. Bickle and S. Wanmaker also left for Victoria, B.C.

ONLY EIGHT YEARS OLD

A Little Girl in the Felon's Dock Yesterday. Magistrate Dumble had before him at the Police Court yesterday morning an eight-year-old girl who was charged with stealing two pairs of shoes, the property of Gough Bros. The evidence went to show that the child, after stealing one pair of shoes and taking them home, went back to the store a second time and took another pair, and on the latter occasion was caught in the act. The magistrate gave her a kindly warning, and then discharged her.

Belleville Post-office

Sir Mackenzie Bowell has called attention in the Senate to the reduction of the post-office of the city of Belleville to the rank of a town post-office. He had no objection to the change, but the plea put forward by the Postmaster-General that the change was made in the interest of economy. What he did object to was that the Conservative city of Belleville should be singled out from his fellow cities in the Dominion which were in exact the same position. Windsor, Kingston, St. John, Quebec, and Charlottetown all had a larger percentage of expenditure in comparison with their revenue than had Belleville. But then these cities were represented by Liberal members.

Mr. Mills reflected that the reduction had been effected in compliance with regulations framed by the late Government. If, as Sir Mackenzie had said, there were other cities in the country which were in the same position as Belleville, he had no doubt that their case would be heard with careful consideration of the Government.

The Race for Prince

Many of the blouses doctored have a deep fringe from the neck to the waist, the fringe being drawn in at the waist. These are most of the kind of rhinoceros, but more often of threaded beads and many of the panels which now find their way into fashionable skirts display rows upon rows of falling fringes, which sway in unison with every movement. Very narrow fringes, made of fluffy silk, are utilized to border flounces, whether of silk, chiffon, ribbon or even lace, and this certainly is a pretty fashion, especially on the short sleeves, where the frills are frequently turned upwards so that they form a semi-circle over the top of the arm.

A Fine Collar at Cobourg

At Cobourg on Saturday night about nine o'clock an accident happened at the Division street crossing of the Grand Trunk. It appears that while Mr. George Cockburn and Mr. Hugh Maher were driving to their home, Baltimore, the rig was struck by a shunting train. The horse broke loose from the rig, uninjured, but Mr. Cockburn had several ribs broken, and it is feared there are other internal injuries. Mr. Maher escaped with a broken collar bone and a severe shaking up.

Removed to the Hospital

Mr. A. H. Sherwood, caretaker of N.C.O. mess rooms, Peterborough, Rangers, Simcoe Street East, has, upon the advice of Dr. Halliday, of the 57th Battalion, been removed to the Nicholas Hospital. He is suffering from pneumonia of the lungs. The members of the mess will miss Harry for the time being. But Harry, who is "all right," will soon be amongst them again. So say and hope we all!

Three Bridges in a Shaky Condition

The floods have badly damaged three of the town bridges, necessitating the closing of two of them—those on Donagel and Sherbrooke streets—to traffic. The high water in the creek has knocked down two of the temporary props which were put in under the bridges last summer. The other shaky bridge is that spanning the creek on Smith street near Jackson Park.

The Biggest Toy in Creation

A rich Baltimore man has determined that America shall own the biggest toy in creation. He is making this toy for his own pleasure, and it occupies one end of his parlor. He has a large plateau on which are a windmill, castle, railroad, equipped with two trains, a log cabin, and a cottage. In the plain below are an arched wall, a farm-house with a pump by it, a Ferris wheel, chutes having a lake at the bottom, windmill, church, prison, swings and band stand. In the plain is a large lake, on which boats will ply. The windmill, Ferris wheel, trains, pumps, etc., will all work, having their attachment as it were, performing the labor. The boat clubhouse and grist mill will be pleasing features. A miller is soon raising barrels of flour by a miller. The power will be supplied by three water-motors concealed under the toy.

Lindsay Men Going West

Three young men of Lindsay—Messrs. Ernest and Walter Culvert and Ed. Wakley—passed through Peterborough on the C.P.R. express yesterday afternoon. They are well known in Lindsay and Peterborough, and have a host of friends in both places, who wish them every success in their life in the West. Messrs. Culvert and Wakley's present intention are to follow their occupations in Revelstoke, B.C., but their tickets are good for Seattle, and there is a possibility that they may be seized with an attack of Klondikeitis and proceed to the Yukon district. May good fortune attend them.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 17, 1898

THE ONTARIO CABINET

We received the following enquiry from a Lakefield correspondent:

"Will the Times state whether or not a member of the Ontario Cabinet is obliged to have a seat in the Legislature?"

No. The British North American act of 1867 provided that the "Executive Council" of Ontario should be "composed of such persons as the Lieutenant-Governor from time to time thinks fit." It further enacted, says the Globe that the Provincial Legislature might amend the Provincial constitution "except as regards the office of Lieutenant-Governor." Under this authority the number of original Cabinet portfolios, those of the Attorney-General, the Provincial Treasurer, the Provincial Secretary, the Commissioner of Crown Lands and the Commissioner of Public Works respectively, has been increased by the addition of the portfolios of Education and that of Agriculture.

There is no declaration, explicit or implicit in the Confederation act that a Minister of the Crown must have a seat in the Legislative Assembly, nor is there any such declaration in any Provincial law. The "act respecting the Executive Council" repeats the very words of the British North American act as to the right of the Lieutenant-Governor to appoint whom he pleases, but enlarges the list of executive offices to seven.

The "act respecting the Legislative Assembly" declares that no person holding any office, commission or employment of profit at the nomination of the Crown shall be eligible as a member of the Legislative Assembly, but an exception is made of the holder of a Ministerial office, provided he is elected while holding it. This provision explains why a newly-appointed Minister with a salary must go back for re-election.

The requirement that the head of each administrative department of the public service must have a seat in Parliament is one of urgency and convenience, not of law. It is, however, an essential part of our system of responsible government, which makes it possible to raise on the floor of the representative chamber any question of administration, and therefore makes it necessary that the Minister who is responsible for it should be present to defend himself, and also to explain what he intends to do with the money which he asks Parliament to appropriate to the service of his department. Under the British system, which is the model of ours, every member of the Cabinet is of necessity in Parliament. This being the substantial basis of the constitutional usage, it follows that there is no objection to a member of the Ministry who has temporarily lost his seat in the Legislature retaining his portfolio while the Legislature is not in session, the only condition being his intention to seek re-election within a reasonable time. The presence of Ministers in Parliament is one of the chief distinctions between the British and American systems, and on the whole the British is the preferable plan, the continual communication between the executive and the law-making body being beneficial to both.

THE REVOLT AGAINST JOBBERY

The revolt against the nepotism and office-mongering characterizing the public life of Ontario to-day was emphasized at the recent general election by the rejection at the polls of Hon. John Dryden, Minister of Agriculture, and Hon. J. M. Gibson, Minister of Crown Lands. These two gentlemen have earned for themselves an unenviable reputation for the way in which they have jumped their relatives into public offices irrespective of their personal fitness and qualifications to hold important positions of trust. Charity begins at home, it is true; and whereas a Cabinet Minister has to choose between two men, one a brother or cousin or nephew, and the other an entire stranger, but both of apparent equally suitable and competent, it is not unreasonable that he should award the appointment to be filled to his relative. But where a strange and undoubted ability is passed over and his claims rejected on account of a minister's relative possessing inferior qualifications being out of employment, then the matter assumes the nature of a scandal. Similarly, the rewarding of political friends by giving them fat offices because they had worked to bring about a minister's re-election is very reprehensible. The practice of this form of jobbery has become a fine art, and has resulted in the sapping of the independence of Parliament. The public life of Ontario is honeycombed with this species of corruption, and the way in which the electors have at last imprinted their brand of disapproval upon it by punishing two notable offenders is a welcome intimation that the Ontario conscience is being aroused.

There will not be very wide-spread regret if seats cannot be found for the accommodation of the Cabinet Ministers now left out in the cold. That they are both capable men, there is no doubt. As Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Dryden was a success, he being active, painstaking and energetic. But by the too sympathetic way in which he cared for his relatives he was the means of bringing about the filling of several public posts by men whose only recommendation was that they had the good fortune to be related to him. The same applies to Mr. Gibson, who as a departmental administrator proved himself to be clever, capable and efficient.

It is well that the object lesson thus furnished should be heeded, and that our public men should place before all other considerations the welfare of the province. If the practice of nepotism and the rewarding of political workers were permitted to remain unchecked, the interests of Ontario would continue to suffer, and we should soon find ourselves in the deplorable condition noticeable in the public life of the United States, where jobbery, corruption and boodle practically reign supreme.

HON. MR. BLAIR

The manly statement of the Minister of Railways on Tuesday last before the committee appointed to enquire into the Drummond County railway matter does away with a lot of Tory talk and swagger about boodle in connection with this matter. Hon. Mr. Blair deserves all possible credit for the work he has done in extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, and all those who are not politically biased will be forced to admit that he is thoroughly alive to the interests of the country.

A recount seems to be as uncertain as an election.

"On to Apsley" should be our motto in connection with the extension of the Electric Railway.

We may not want our pop-guns after all. The cooling down of the war fever and the declaration in favor of peace by a Chicago minister have allayed the fears—and also disappointed the hopes—of many.

Yesterday's spring-like weather made even the dyspeptic betray the glimmer of a smile upon his counting-house.

Election judges are trying to serve a question as complex as a woman's mind—the meaning of doubtful ballots.

To adequately observe Lent, it is necessary to keep an eye on your umbrella after you have lent it to a friend.

The Peterborough Board of Trade is doing good business. It knows how to make both ends meet, with the right and considerably overlapping the other.

It is said that both Mr. Stratton and Mr. Stone are in the thickest of the fight in Russell, and are preaching home government. Mr. Stratton should not forget that people in glass houses should not throw stones.

The story that Mr. Garvin has taken to the woods since the election is not true. Although he is gradually recovering, he yet wonders what struck him on March 1st. The swelling in his head has gone down considerably, but it has not yet entirely disappeared.

Kingston Penitentiary has released a millionaire, who has been serving 14 years for forgery. His name is Chas. J. Chandler, has large properties in the Northwest, has two sons running a ranch in Dakota, owns a large oyster hatchery, and pays his wife $100 a week alimony. He is 65 years of age, and a millionaire in experiences as well as in dollars.

The other countries realize this, and Germany has ordered twenty-five hundred tons of nickel from the Nickel-Steel Company of Canada, now asking incorporation from the Government. This means an expenditure of one and a half million dollars, and is causing much talk in Ottawa. The power to impose duties was given the Government by Parliament last year, when the Canadian Copper Company went back on its promises to erect refineries in Canada.

The question of an export duty on nickel, with regard to which the Board of Trade passed a resolution on Monday night, is a live one. The fact that the Canadian Government has the power to impose an export duty on nickel, of which Canada has a pretty fair monopoly, is of much importance in the event of war. Canada an dFrance have the nickel mines of the world, and should, if need be, monopolize the great benefit derived from nickel as armour for warships.

SENATORS IN DANGER

SAID TO BE HOLDING THEIR PLACE IN THE SECOND CHAMBER ILLEGALLY.

(Special to the Times.)
OTTAWA, March 15—There is talk here of a revolution to be made in the Senate.

It is pretty well understood that not a few members of the Upper Chamber have been sitting for years without the proper qualification which the British North America Act requires of them. In fact, it is asserted that there are those in the Senate who have no business to be there, and some of these are the most bitter and noisy members who are opposed to the Administration.

There are always men in every assembly who would think nothing of ruining the country if they could but damage their political opponents in doing so. They are ready to scuttle the ship, and take the risk of going to the bottom if they can drown their fellow passengers.

There are many who now declare that the Government does not deserve support if it continues to have within the Senate walls persons who are without that qualification which the letter of the law requires.

The Akies of Lent
O Lord of Grace, we think of all Thy penance that might have been;
We kneel, abashed, at many a shrine,
Repeating many a sin.
The bells of earth, in solemn woe,
Throb o'er the meadows brown;
Yet, over all, with loving eyes,
The tender blue looks down.

The softest light of early spring,
The budding of the trees,
Are sweet enough, yet heaven is full Of sweeter things than these;
The answer to our penitence,
Our sorrow's sudden crown,
We see it shining! Love intense
From out the blue looks down.

Behind our misty veil of tears
A sense of pardon gleams;
A Presence as of One beloved
On our contrition beams!
O silvery hush of dawning light,
O warmth of brooding wing!
O Christ of God, like lilies white,
Thy blessed Easter bring!

I firmly believe that we have almost every kind of mineral here but coal, and that may be found yet. If Mr. Starr and his company would only take the matter in hand they will find that the undertaking would not be nearly as difficult as one would imagine by the look of the country. We are now from Lakefield distant 32 miles by wagon road, but only 25 miles and a fraction the way the railroad would be built from Lakefield to Young's Point is 5 miles, and a fraction, and from Burleigh Falls to Apsley 15 miles (20 miles by wagon road). The route from Burleigh Falls to Apsley, nearly in a direct line, would be through a valley which nature seems to have made for the purpose. It would run between the two Great Lakes and then take the valley of the Creek where little or no cuts would be required to be made. The material for making the road is on the ground—gravel, bridge timber or stone, he ties the telegraph poles, everything in fact but the rails, and the material for making them is here also embedded in the earth. What more is required for making the road? The Ontario Legislature will give any company who will build the road $3,000 per mile as a subsidy, and if I have not been wrongly informed the Dominion Government will give an equivalent sum. The settlers will give every assistance in their power (except money)—rights of way, ties, poles, etc. All that is required in an enterprising man like Mr. Starr to take hold of it and push it through. The settlers of East and Chandos townships are now taking out all kinds of merchantable timber, even balsam for pulp wood; all this, thousands of dollars worth in a winter—goes out of the country by way of Coe Hill with the Central Ontario Railroad, which road is kept busy. Even from Loon Lake, 3 miles from Apsley, they are drawing to this railroad, whereas if we had a road in operation in our own county it would all go down to Peterborough.

"I am afraid," I have already trespassed too much on your valuable space so will bring this letter to a close. If I were to go into details it would take several columns. I know full well that you have the interests of the Town of Peterborough, and also of this back country at heart, and that you will do all in your power to support a feasible scheme of such importance to the town and county. Should Mr. Starr take the matter up I shall feel glad to give him every information in my power as to the resources of the country, route, etc., or probable prospects of embarking in such an undertaking. I have lived in this country now for over 25 years, so I am pretty thoroughly acquainted with what is most needed here, and I live in great hopes of bright prospects for our northern country in the near future.

"Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for the space which this letter will occupy in your valuable paper, which is meant for the public good, and hoping it will be the means of bringing forth good fruit, I remain,

Yours truly,

PEYTON W. C. SHEWEN.

Apsley, March 16, 1898.

How the Prince of Wales Travels

The Prince of Wales has just had a new car built which he will use when traveling on the different railroads in England. The car was built by the Great Eastern Railway Company at Stratford and is very luxuriously fitted up in every way. The new car is constructed like the American cars and is mounted on two four wheeled bogies, one at each end. It is a saloon car, and in addition to the saloon and boudoir has apartments for the attendants. The body of the saloon is 41 feet long. The interior of the car is decorated with English walnut and satinwood. The ceiling is covered with linoleum. The car is painted in cream and gold. The saloon and boudoir are upholstered in blue morocco and the draperies are of blue silk. The saloon has seats for eight persons and the boudoir seats six. The car is lighted by oil gas and is fitted with the Westinghouse vacuum automatic brake.

SCORING A HOG.

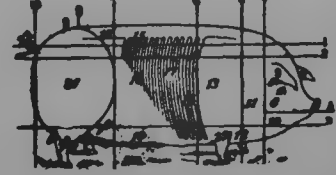

H. A. Jones, Sec'y International O. I. C. Record Association, Shows How With Figures and Explanation.

In the course of pure bred stock breeding comes many a new idea, which may be beneficial to the breeder. It is advocated to-day by many that "there is more in feed than breed," and this same old adage will ever be handed down from generation to generation, without doubt, by those who do not, by nature and education, understand the principles of stock breeding. In dealing with this subject, I shall not endeavor to go over the entire subject, but concentrate upon the one branch of the industry and deal only with the hog. There is presented here an outline cut of a hog, and I will endeavor to show before closing these papers, that the division "feed first and then feed" will ever be the guide to success. I realize full well there are many choice grade hogs in this country, that for the black will bring just as many dollars as the pure bred. This we all admit, but the facts go to prove the finest grade is valued only for pork, and the finest pure bred is valued least for pork. The grade, then, is never worth more than for pork, or its products, while the pure bred, no one can tell the value of as a breeder.

In the outset, I desire to say these papers will not be written in the interest of any particular breed of hogs, nor any undue respect shown to any breed or breeder. This is a free country, and we all have our likes and dislikes, not only in grade hogs, but in pure bred as well. I go, so far as to show wherein we can improve our hogs and the condition of our breeders—by adhering more closely to the principles underlying the breeding of pure bred.

During the past half century much has been done to bring about desirable results in pure bred swine. Some prefer black, others red, spotted or white. While some prefer the large hog, others prefer the smaller or medium; but when the desired results are asked for, all agree that the hog that will make the greatest number of pounds of pork for the food consumed, in a period of six or seven months, and have sufficient bone to carry the carcass, is the most profitable for the general markets and the average farmer.

This may be true to a certain extent.

POINTS OF A HOG.

The following Roman figures denote the lines showing how to score a hog: A, 1-2-3-4-5, 7-8-9-10. Line A shows the head upon level running parallel with mouth. 1 shows upper and outside back line. 2 shows head and tail line. 3 shows lower side or upper of belly line. 4 shows neck and head line division. 5 shows neck and shoulder line division. 6 shows shoulder and side line division. 7 shows side and get heart girth. 8 shows side and a line division, also shows centre of ribs and flank. 9 front ham line. 10 rear ham line. Both lines meet at dot on front of hock. 10 shows the stern of back square of outline. All other figures are to denote the various other figures are to denote the various divisions on the score card.

and I believe it is; but it is not conclusive. To illustrate: There are two brothers who have an equal amount of this world's goods—lands of equal value and improvement—and they make a break for existence. One is a careful, painstaking, practical conservative man and devotes his energy to study his business, investigates the causes of other's success, and applies his findings to profit in his own business. He breeds pure bred stock of all kinds, commencing with only a pair or trio, and in the course of time every year or two makes an addition to his herd, by exchange, or otherwise, of a good one. He avoids pronounced breeding and breeds for a purpose solely of owning the most profitable herds of stock he is able to get. He has at the end of the year a value he cannot count, while his dollars may be counted as many as his brother's.

The brother is a careful, easy-going, industrious, hard-working man, very conservative, and a little doubtful that he will not get as many dollars in immediate benefits as he is called upon to pay, and he pursues the policy, "let brother investigate and I'll reap the profit." He pursues that course and finds his investment worth no more in ten years than when he commenced, and is then forced to realize there are ever changing conditions beyond his grasp, and that he must wake up and hustle or he will soon be a back number. While his brother sowed and reaped abundance, he simply sowed and reaped his harvest, year by year. His hogs and flock were there same every year, and he could see no very marked improvement. He had no outside calls, at good prices, for cows from his dairy, sows or steers from his pen, simply because the reason he grows only ordinary common stock.

Now, is this not a waste of one's capabilities? If not, what is it? Do you desire to improve your herd? Then investigate. Procure some good dams, of any of the pure breeds, and a good sire, all of the highest standard of excellence which your purse will allow you to get, and from some reliable breeder, who is not afraid to open his stock book and show you the record of the breeding of any particular animal, and who is not afraid to ship any of his choice breeding stock upon a written guarantee that the animal possesses a certain number of desirable points, and is of the breeding certified by the secretary of the Record Association shown by certificate of registry, and of which there can be no doubt, and that satisfaction is then guaranteed to you by every member of the association, under which your animal received his record number.

Now come the points. What are they and how ascertained? Whatever breed of cattle, sheep or swine you desire to purchase, ask the breeder to send you the by-laws and rules of the association in which his animals are recorded, and then study out for yourself what the quality of the stock is which the breeder has to offer, and does offer you. Then require the breeder to certify the animal scores (or possesses) a certain number of points, and to be registered as such, and satisfaction guaranteed to you, and you will have no cause to regret the purchase.

It is a veritable saying: "Put up the bars, that the hogs can't get out." The various Record Associations offer you the same. Will you use them for your benefit? Then, in case you are not satisfied, your remedy is to appeal to the association where the animal is recorded, after the breeder fails to rectify any dissatisfaction he may cause.

In the foregoing, you have the fundamental points of pure bred swine as established by the above said, at 7-figures. Let. Bred by: The person who controls the breeding.

SOAP BUBBLES.

Their Color and Their Wonderful Thinness Determined.

The extreme thinness of the bubble is indeed wonderful. It is estimated that the film in some places is only one three-millionths of an inch in thickness. Probably few of us can conceive of such thinness. Let us express it in another way. The Old and New Testament contain some three million letters. Now one three-millionth is such a part of an inch as the first letter of the Bible is a part of the sum of all its letters.

The bubble, however, is not of equal thickness at all points, and it is for this reason that it has the various colors. For instance, wherever the film is orange-red it measures about three one-millionths of an inch; where it is blue, eighty one-millionths of an inch; and at a point where the yellow is prominent, about twenty one-millionths of an inch. Perhaps you wonder why the colors change from one part of the soap bubble to another. This is because the film of the soap-bubble evaporates and grows thinner, but unequally so at different portions. A greenish blue with a pale rose-red spot near it indicates an extreme thinness, and at such a point the film is ready to give way at the least jar.

You will be glad to know the source of the beautiful colors. Everyone is delighted with them, even if not interested by the explanation of their origin. We may say that they come from the light. Light gives color to all objects, but not exactly as it does to the soap-bubble. White light from the sun can be broken into the seven colors which we have seen in the rainbow. In that instance the raindrops separate it into its parts. A glass prism will do the same, as you may prove by looking through a glass prism at a hanging lamp. When the light reaches a soap-bubble a part is reflected from it, and we see images on its surface as if it were a curved mirror. Another portion of the light, however, enters the film and is separated so that a part of the seven colors are thrown into the bubble, and we can see them at various portions of the opposite surface. Another part of the light, after being broken by the film, is reflected by its inner surface back to our eyes, so that we see colors at the point where the light enters.—Jacob F. Butler, in St. Nicholas.

Electricity Made at Home. It has been discovered that if a steel knife and a silver fork are inserted in a large orange an electric current will be generated. If the end of the fork and the end of the knife sticking from the orange are connected with an electric measuring instrument, quite a perceptible current will be seen to flow. The same kind of a battery can be made by substituting a cucumber in place of the orange, in fact, any acid fruit can be used.

In order to make a voltaic pile it is only necessary to procure ten or more pieces of zinc about one inch square, the same number of pieces of copper, and a like number of pieces of paper. The paper should be thoroughly soaked in vinegar. First, take a piece of zinc; on it place a piece of vinegar-soaked paper, then put on a piece of copper, then a piece of paper, then another piece of zinc, then paper, and so on until all the pieces of zinc, copper and paper are used up. It is important that a piece of zinc should be on one end and a piece of copper on the other. After the pile is completed, again soak the whole slightly in vinegar, then clean it off on the outside. If the forefinger of one hand is held against one end and the forefinger of the other hand is held on the other end of the pile, quite a perceptible current will be felt. If several persons clasp hands and the persons on each end of the line touch the voltaic pile, the current will flow through the bodies of all those in position.

A Billon

When a member of the Times staff was quietly winding his way home yesterday morning about 2.30, he was somewhat startled to notice a billon in the North-Western horizon. It was only a speck in the heavens, but from the light which it carried it was shown clearly that it was a billon. It is perhaps the same billon that passed over London the previous evening. The news says: "Star gazing citizens saw a billon over the city about six o'clock Saturday night. The billon came from the North-East, to appearing to burn, and after remaining suspended over the city for a short time retired as mysteriously as it had come."

"Equestrian in Pace"

We regret to record the death of Mount St. Joseph of Sister M. Celestine, who has just departed to her rest. The deceased sister was 25 years of age, and was at one time known to the world as Miss Joanna Twomey. She was the daughter of Mr. Jeremiah Twomey, of Fenelon Falls, and received the veil on January 2, 1894, making profession and renunciation on August 19, 1896. She leaves a mother, two brothers and two sisters, who are nuns. Four members of the family have become nuns, one of whom died about a year ago. The funeral will leave the Mother House on Friday at nine o'clock for the Roman Catholic cemetery.

Bell Tel. phone Co. Cutting Exp. After

As a result of a recent decision on the part of the Bell Telephone management, many of the smaller exchanges throughout Ontario will be placed in charge of district superintendents in order to reduce expenses. In consequence of this arrangement the services of Mr. E. M. Quirk, local manager here, will be dispensed with on April 1st, the staff here being placed in charge of District Superintendent Knapman, of Peterborough. The company's subscribers here, and our citizens generally, will learn of Mr. Quirk's impending departure with regret, as he has been a very obliging official.—Lindsay Post.

The Stamped Envelope

The Postoffice Department is about issuing the first instalment of the new stamped envelope. There will, as hitherto, be three denominations of envelopes in the forthcoming series—the 1 cent, 2 cent and 3 cent—but there will be only one size, that of the present No. 2, or larger envelope. The cost of the larger envelopes has been reduced 10 cents per hundred in each denomination, and a further concession granted the public by supplying, without extra cost, and whenever preferred, these envelopes bearing a blank form of request for the return of the letter, should it not be delivered within a specified time.

Good for Peterborough

Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons yesterday received an enquiry from Mr. S. B. Hughes, Pa. U.S.A., in reference to tents for Alaska (and the Klondike), and asking for an opinion as to what tent the firm considered the best for the countries designated. This enquiry well for Messrs. Turner & Sons, and shows that the excellent reputation they enjoy is not limited to Canada. All these little evidences of appreciation are gratifying not only to the firm immediately concerned, but also to the town of Peterborough.

Prospective Death of Farm Help

Present indications point to a dearth of farm help in Ontario during the coming summer, and already farmers in different sections are becoming anxious. The Klondike craze and the subsequent rush to the Northwest has taken off the floating population upon which the farmers usually rely, and during the past week several requests for help have reached the Department of Agriculture from different parts of the country, showing that the feeling appears to be pretty general.

First Prize in Baking Pies

Symptoms: Moisture intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate and become very sore. Swaine's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Swaine & Son, Philadelphia, Lyman Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents.

The House and Lot, property of Wm. Leach, 302 Hunter Street, will be offered for sale March the twenty-second, by auction.

Intending purchasers may inspect the house and premises the day before, from two until four o'clock. The store between Mr. Stratton's and W. Leach & Sons' fur store will also be offered for sale at the same time.

A QUEER PRISONER

Didn't Want to Leave When His Time Was Up

Martin Kopecki, a middle-aged Pole, who has been arrested a number of times for vagrancy and for petty thefts from the railroad yards, was sent to the Buffalo penitentiary about a month ago. His term was 30 days. It expired on Saturday. When one of the prison officials notified him that his time was up and he could go early that afternoon the prisoner surprised him by refusing to go.

"I don't want to go away. Let me alone. I want to stay here," he said.

The attendant looked at him and saw there was a peculiar look in his eyes, and concluded something was wrong with him. The authorities had no right to hold him prisoner any longer, but Kopecki was determined that he would not leave. So it came to that pass that the officers were obliged literally to put him out.

Once outside the building the trouble seemed to be over. Kopecki started off on Pennsylvania Street toward Niagara. He had not gone far before he changed his mind and went back to the prison. He knocked on the door for admittance. Deputy-Keeper McDonald was not expecting him back and he opened the door. Kopecki forced himself inside and the deputy was obliged to put him out again.

Kopecki began to rave. He pounded and kicked at the door and closed his ears to all the orders to go away. At last the deputy had to telephone to the police of the Tenth Precinct to come and get "a crazy man." Finally Kopecki went and got him and took him to the station-house. He had no difficulty with the prisoner, as the prisoner was told he was to be locked up. That was what he seemed to want, so he went along with the police.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Town Councillors Were Busily Engaged Last Evening

The Young Women's Christian Association to be Exempted from Taxation—The Cattle Pillar Question Tackled in Earnest—Back-Street Market—The Case of Wm. Croft, Hotel Keeper

There were several committee meetings held at the clerk's office last night, when the members in attendance were Mayor Davis and Councillors J. B. McWilliams, J. M. White, W. H. White, Denne, Allen, Langford, Cobb, Best and Robertson.

THE LEGAL COMMITTEE.

Coun. McWilliams presided over the Legal committee, who recommended that the original taxes on the G. T. R. property be accepted without interest or costs. The committee also recommended "That if Mr. Thomas Bradburn will pay the original amount of arrears of taxes on his property the town accept it, and that if he will not the town will agree to submit a test case to the County Court judge as a Division Court case, provided he will consent to accept the judge's decision."

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mayor Davis presided. The Young Women's Christian Association for exemption from taxation was discussed at length.

Coun. Cobb questioned if it was right to practically punish people who were running in opposition to the boarding houses.

Coun. McWilliams said the Y.W.C.A. were not running in opposition, and asserted that they were doing a great deal of good work. He believed that in one case a girl's life was saved by her going there.

Coun. Robertson pointed out that both the Catholic Institution and the Y.M.C.A. had been excused their taxes. In what respect did the Y.W.C.A. differ from these?

Coun. McWilliams: As far as I can see, they are all on the same ground. We ought not to exempt one without the other.

Coun. Best said the Court of Revision had considered the application and refused it.

Coun. Langford, chairman of the Court of Revision, intimated his intention not to vote either way on this question. He wished it made clear that the Court of Revision had no power to grant an exemption and quoted a legal authority in support of his statement.

On the proposition of Coun. McWilliams, seconded by Coun. W. H. White, it was agreed to excuse the Y.W.C.A. payment of their taxes.

Coun. McWilliams emphasized the wish of the members to cast no reflection upon the Court of Revision, and said that they recognized the question was one which ought to be settled by the council.

The chairman introduced the subject of the threatened caterpillar pest. He mentioned that that day he had made an experiment by setting his man to work with a tree pruner, 12 feet long, to see how many caterpillar nests he could secure. He worked two hours and obtained 200 nests. The man complained that his neck was nearly broken and that for a few hours afterwards he could see nothing but stars. (Laughter) He suggested the engagement of men with boys to assist them to do the trees on the streets by means of these pruners.

Coun. Best said that unless the citizens joined with the town in getting the caterpillars off their own trees the money proposed to be spent would be completely thrown away.

Coun. McWilliams saw the difficulty, but thought that when they noticed the men at work on the public trees they would "go and do likewise."

Coun. Cobb proposed the engagement of four men at a payment of $125 a day each, with a number of boys to assist them at a remuneration of 50c each per day, and the purchase of twelve tree pruners.

Coun. Denne seconded the proposition, which was agreed to.

Councillors Cobb, Langford, Denne, and Best promised to oversee the work in the different wards.

The obstructions caused on the market and in the market hall by hucksters formed the subject of a long discussion. The following proposition was agreed to: "That a clause be inserted in the agreement to the effect that no dry goods, jewelry, hardware, cutlery, haberdashery or novelties of any description be allowed to be sold in the market buildings, nor any tables allowed; no goods to be offered for sale in the passage ways or landings."

PROPERTY COMMITTEE.

Coun. W. H. White presided. Tenders for the repairing and repainting of the water carts were opened. The lowest tender was that of Mr. Tom McGrath for $88, which was accepted.

MARKET COMMITTEE.

The committee settled the terms upon which the market tolls and charges should be offered by auction on March 28th.

FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Coun. Denne presided. A letter was read from Mr. James Haverson, solicitor, asking for support of an application to the Ontario Legislature for the remission of a $50 fine upon William Croft, hotel-keeper, for allowing liquor to be sold to three minors. Stress was laid by the writer of the letter upon the fact that Mr. Croft had always been rigidly careful to observe the license law during the quarter of a century he had been a license-holder, and that the offence for which Mr. Croft was convicted was really committed by a friend who was ignorant of the law and who had volunteered to attend to the bar during the absence of the bartender and the illness of Mr. Croft, although of course, the license-holder was legally responsible. The committee passed a resolution sympathizing with Mr. Croft and hoping that the Government would see their way to remit the fine.

ON THE EVE OF WAR

War Between Spain and the United States Imminent

Wild Talk in Havana—Latest News From all Parts of the Wide, Wide World

Special to the Times.

Havana, March 17.—The situation is becoming alarming. The city and country is in a terrible state of tension, and even the outbreak of hostilities would relieve it. No one here believes that war can be averted, and even the Spaniards feel that they are to lose Cuba as a result of the struggle. Great Britain is credited with being hand-in-glove with the United States, so that there is little to hope for by Spain but an inglorious and disastrous struggle.

Ominous secrecy.

Washington, March 17.—There is no change in the situation here, except that there is greater secrecy in all Government circles. An early adjournment has been abandoned and an effort will be made in the near future to compel the production of all consular reports.

WILD REPORTS IN HAVANA

ONE IS THAT ENGLAND WILL LEND HER FLEET TO THE UNITED STATES.

Havana, March 17.—The local newspapers jubilantly publish cable despatches from Europe declaring that the triple alliance as well as Russia and France, has notified the United States that no interference in Cuban affairs will be permitted. Emperor William is specially relied upon to prevent intervention.

A RIDICULOUS STORY.

Yesterday Señor Congosto, the Secretary General, was much exercised over a report received by the Government that the Prince of Wales had declared that England would supply the United States, and intervene with her fleet if necessary. He was also informed that, in consequence of this English flag was flying everywhere in New York city. English plays being presented in all the theatres, and "God Save the Queen" and other British national airs rendered by all the orchestras. Señor Congosto did not, however, get a confirmation of this story from either the American or British consuls in Havana.

Cable messages from London to several English tobacco merchants telling them to leave the island at once and hinting that war seems inevitable have been received here.

THE REQUEST OF SPAIN.

The report is circulated here that Spain has requested the United States to remove the fleet now at the Dry Tortugas and Key West to a greater distance from the Cuban coast on the ground that its presence interferes with the efforts of the autonomists to induce the insurgents to lay down their arms.

MR. HARDY MUST QUIT

The Governments Defeat is Now Fully Assured

THEIR MAJORITY VANISHING

But the Russell Election To Day May Give Them Fresh Courage

The Defeated Ministers Will Hold on Until They Have to Go—The Strength of the Parties Now Practically Even

The Times is in a position to state that the collapse of the Hardy Government is imminent. The Globe's majority of five or six has gradually dwindled away, until the parties stand practically even—47 Liberals and 46 Conservatives. We have classed both Mr. Tucker and Mr. Beatty as supporters of Mr. Whitney. Mr. Tucker has announced himself as such, while Mr. Beatty has assured a representative of this paper, who saw him personally, that he would vote with the Conservatives. He gave as a reason that the recent election was practically a notice to Mr. Hardy to quit, and he felt it his duty to give effect, so far as he could, to that demand.

Mr. Powell, Ottawa, was also counted out by the Globe, as was also Mr. Beck. These ridings are all lined up against the Government; not only this but the outlook in four or five other ridings is ominous in the extreme. This is exactly how matters stand. It is all very well for Grit and Tory newspapers to lie about it; our business is to give the truth, so far as we know.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 18, 1898

PETERBORO'S OPPORTUNITY

The letter we published yesterday from Mr. Peyton W. O. Shewen, Clerk of Burleigh and Anstruther, is one which should receive an early and careful consideration by the Peterborough Board of Trade, a body of gentlemen ever alive to the commercial interests of the town and county. The opening up of a railway connection with the back country would bring about a development much to be desired. The suggestion made by our correspondent with convincing logic is that, in view of the proposed construction of an electric road to Lakefield, Apsley should be brought into communication. It is admitted that the people from the back country are unable to develop their varied resources owing to the lack of means of easy transportation. The country is rich in agricultural products, all kinds of lumber, and minerals, which cannot be made the most of because of the need of railway connection with a good market town. If Mr. Starr and his company construct their projected railway to Lakefield, surely there is a great opportunity for some enterprising individual or individuals to extend the line some 25 miles further north. Government aid would be forthcoming to the extent of $5,000 per mile from the Ontario Legislature, and it is believed that the Dominion Government will give an equivalent sum, though as to the correctness of the latter point we are unable to speak authoritatively. However, be that as it may, we venture to think it is sufficiently clear that Mr. Shewen has made out a good case, both from the utilitarian and also the financial point of view. But it is not merely on account of the freight business the projected railway is calculated to bring about that the scheme is desirable. There would likely be quite an amount of passenger traffic, though of course to a less valuable extent. The Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railways have discontinued the issue of the cheap market or farmers' tickets formerly in vogue, with the result that many people do not come into Peterborough who might otherwise do so on Saturdays. This section of the public might be well catered for.

We refer thus prominently to this matter in the hope that it will engage the attention of the members of the Board of Trade and other business men who are interested in the commercial prosperity of the locality. Peterborough is an important centre, and should have a big future. Opportunities for development should be taken advantage of when they arise. The time is at hand when lasting benefits may be secured for the town and also for the country by opening up railway communication between Apsley and surrounding localities and Peterborough. That chance must not be lost.

The spasm in Russia has reached a crisis to-day.

The war news from the United States is painful.

One or two have been counted out as a result of the re-counts.

The construction of a railway means employment for capital and labor.

The Hamilton police are in the buy-cycle line. Scorchers will now get scorched.

It is hoped that business men will form into line on the railway question. A "line" is required from Apsley to Peterborough via Lakefield.

Lunacy assumes strange forms. A Canadian has just eloped with his mother-in-law—a red-headed woman, too. He'll doubtless have a hot time of it.

A convict in an American prison nearly killed a fellow-convict by hitting him with a tumbler. People living in stone houses should never throw glass.

In the event of war neither Spain nor United States would be invaded. The alien labor law would keep out the Spaniards and Uncle Sam could not reach the vine-clad hills of Spain without a navy.

"How do they keep the town clock wound?" enquired a country cousin in front of the Times office the other day. "They have a winding stairway in the tower," assured the Smart Aleck from town.

With the Queen and Lord Salisbury in France, the Empire on which the sun never sets would feel real lonely were it not for the fact that J. W. Garvin and J. R. Stratton are still to be found in the blooming colony.

BOLD BILL ANTHONY

A Marvellous Combination of Stolidity and Tenderness

How he Lost a Good Position as Recruiting Officer He Hated to Accept None but Americans

Sixteen words and a salute made a his toric character of Bill Anthony, marine orderly of the ill-fated battleship Maine. "Sir," said Anthony to Captain Sigbee, standing at salute, "I have to inform you that the ship has been blown up and is sinking."

Characters like Anthony are neither born nor made. They are both. Brought into the world near the Bittery, in New York city, his earliest impressions were of forts and ships. Young Anthony had just completed his regular course in the public schools when the family moved to New Jersey. Quiet life was intolerable to Bill, and he enlisted. That happened 23 years ago, and from that moment Anthony has never ceased to wear the uniform.

His first active service carried him to the Carolinas, where the Klux were busily engaged in their devilities. There he had the foundations for his soldierly reputation. His commanding officer in those early days was Major Stewart, long since retired, but still living.

Years after a young man drifted into the marine corps as a volunteer, a slender, soft handed fellow, who was the butt of the company until Bill Anthony, the pride of the barracks, called a halt. The recruit proved to be the wayward son of Anthony's old major, and the big marine watched over him like a father.

His last army service was at West Point, where he figured to the admiration of cadets and everybody else as drum major. Bill's splendid figure and profound knowledge of soldiery won this appointment.

Ten years ago he left the army and enlisted as a marine. It was the old story over again—rapid advancements, followed by the inevitable setbacks, all due to unwise conviviality. Not that Bill ever transgressed while on duty, for a finer disciplinarian never wore a marine uniform. Over at the Brooklyn navy yard Anthony is well known and well liked. He was stationed there for two years, and during the greater part of that time served as clerk in the recruiting office.

They gave him the position on account of his unerring judgment in the selection of men. No would-be recruit not physically up to the mark ever succeeded in running the gantlet of Anthony's inspection. But he lost the clerkship, and a singular story is afloat as to the cause of it.

Anthony was intensely American. One of the tenets of his faith was that none but native born citizens should don the United States uniform. So when it was discovered that Anthony had put his views into active operation, and that lusty foreign born recruits were being barred out, brave Bill was returned to the ranks.

One incident in his soldierly career illustrates his love of discipline in a striking fashion. During all the years of his service Anthony had been unable to revisit his home. His father died, and the mother was cared for by two nieces in a little Jersey village near Newark.

Anthony regularly forwarded a part of each month's pay to the venerable woman and sent her a soldier's brief letter now and again, but 17 years passed without a meeting.

One day Anthony, on sentry duty at the Brooklyn navy yard, suddenly stood face to face with an old lady. She looked up into his clear gray eyes, as if struggling to remember. Then in a voice that trembled asked: "Do you know my son William—William Anthony, sir? They told me he was here."

It was his mother, the woman he loved with all his soldier heart and saw there for the first time in 17 years, but he was on guard.

He longed to throw away the rifle and to clasp the withered hands held out toward him. But the soldier in him triumphed.

"God bless you, mother! I'm your boy!" he cried. "But don't kiss me now—I'm on guard."

So the old lady went away to the barracks to wait while Anthony tramp his post without a murmur until the gates reached the officer of the day.

Then the unbending sentry was relieved, and there was such a meeting between mother and son as the old bar racks never saw before.

Anthony was detailed to the Brooklyn on her cruises in the Chinese seas. Upon his return he was sent to the Maine, where his soldierly merit won him the post of marine orderly.

X, THEN BRAIN RAYS.

PROF. CROOKES' WONDERFUL THEORY OF THOUGHT TRANSFERENCE.

The Great Scientist's Latest Speculations and the Vast Amount of Attention They Are Receiving—Something of His Line of Logic and Argument.

Prof. Crookes' new application of the wave theory is attracting a vast amount of attention in certain quarters, says the London correspondent of The New York Sun. The conception of brain waves which he puts forward is a bold one, but he justifies it with one of the most fascinating, if fanciful, arguments ever advanced in the cold, unimaginative name of science. The suggestion is, in brief, that thoughts, intelligence, may be transmitted from one sensitive being to another, without regard to distance, of intervening matter, by means of inconceivably minute and rapid ether waves. The strain which Prof. Crookes puts upon ignorant human credulity by the mere statement of such a proposition is severe enough, but it is mitigated somewhat by the gentle process which precedes his stunning announcement. He begs us to free our minds from all preconceived assumptions and prejudices which, he rightly declares, are greater obstacles to the growth of knowledge than mere ignorance. He tells us in so many words that we do not know as much about nature and the universe as we think we do.

He illustrates and emphasizes this humbling suggestion by means of a couple of parables. Imagine, he says, a tiny being of the microscopic size of Small's "Atom"—so small that the molecular forces, of which we in ordinary life make no account, such as surface tension, capillary attraction, the cohesion of liquids, etc., would be so conspicuous that it could hardly believe in the existence of, for instance, the law of gravitation. Prof. Crookes puts his imaginary homunculus on a cabbage leaf and speculates as to what would be the Hesperian philosopher's conception of the laws of the world, the laws of nature and the scheme of the universe. The notes dancing in the sunshine would be to him "cumulous objects like prominent clouds flying through the air." He would be terrified by the thinnest insects. Motions and sounds unknown to us would be commonplace to him. The knowledge available to him in the physical world would be perhaps as vast as that which we possess and as genuine as far as it went.

The Professor goes on to suppose that his tiny student, endowed with all the mental capacity of man, collects his information into a great scheme of the universe from the point of view of a cabbage leaf. Then, after a moment to contrast the result with the product of a similar investigation made by a shrewder imaginary organism as vast as, for example, the whole of the philosopher's world. Having dwelt on this interesting contrast with a most ingenious play of fancy, the Professor proceeds to ask the inevitable question: If such changes in our elementary ideas would come to pass from a mere difference in size, may not all our so-called knowledge be limited by our accidental environment?

Having thus cleared the way for his invasion from the domain of physics into the region usually regarded as that of metaphysics, Prof. Crookes discusses his wave-law theory. It is an extension of the well-known natural law under which sounds are conveyed by vibrations of the atmosphere and light by the vibrations of the thinner ether. He presents an interesting calculation of the number or rapidity of these vibrations. Starting first with one pendulum beat, or vibration a second and increasing to two, then to four, then to eight, and on in geometrical progression, he carries the calculation on to the sixty-third step, where the number of vibrations a second are expressed by a number containing nineteen figures. At the fifth step, where the vibrations are thirty-two a second, we enter the region where sound begins for the average human ear. With the fifteenth step is reached a point at which for the average human ear sound ends. From the sixteenth to the thirty-third step is attained a region of a highly attenuated medium with far more rapid vibrations revealing themselves as electrical rays.

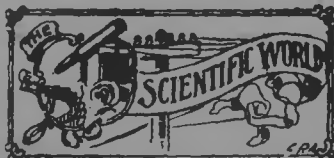

Higher up the scale from the thirtieth to the forty-fifth step, is a realm which is at present unexplored, but in which Prof. Crookes thinks may lie the explanation of much now wholly mysterious. Still rising in the scale, with vibrations of prodigious rapidity, comes the region of light; and beyond that lies another unknown region, as to which Mr. Crookes hazards the conjecture that "it is not unlikely that the X rays of Prof. Röntgen will be found to lie between the fifty-eighth and the sixty-first step."

Of the operations performed within two of these regions little is known; and ascending still higher in the scale, "it does not require much stretch of the scientific imagination to conceive that at the sixty-second or sixty-third step the transmitters from which rays at the sixty-first step were struggling to free themselves have ceased to influence, etc., and that these rays pierce the densest medium with no diminution of intensity, and pass unrefracted and unabsorbed along their straight path with the velocity of light." Soaring still higher on the wings of "scientific imagination," he assumes orders of vibrations still more minute, waves of ether ceasing to have the properties of those known to us and overcoming all obstacles caused by distances or intervening matter.

Dropping the stricter processes of logic, Prof. Crookes then suggests in a more tentative way: May not these rays enable intelligences to be transmitted from one sensitive being to another? May not their radius of action be practically limitless? "It is inconceivable that intense thought concentrated toward a sensitive being with whom the thinker is in close sympathy may induce a telepathic chain, along which brain waves can go straight to their goal without loss of energy due to distance."

No man of science has contributed anything to recent discussion of scientific subjects which will appeal more pleasantly and more convincingly to the popular imagination than the paper which I have briefly described. Prof. Crookes occupies no distinguished position in the scientific world that he is entitled to serious consideration even when he indulges in flights of fancy such as this disquisition is in some, at least, of its conclusions. His logic is strong, apparently, even to the point where he assigns the still mysterious X rays to their place in nature's scheme. To say that they lie on the borderland, only a step removed from the domain of telepathy and all those strange phenomena whose very existence is still virtually unrecognized, is a startling suggestion. It would be better, perhaps, to say that they lie on the borderland, only a step removed from the domain of telepathy, would make it perfectly clear that they exist.

SOAP BUBBLES.

Their Color and Their Wonderful Thinness Determined.

The extreme thinness of the bubble is indeed wonderful. It is estimated that the film in some places is only one three-millionths of an inch in thickness. Probably few of us can conceive of such thinness. Let us express it in another way. The Old and New Testament contain some three million letters. Now one three-millionths is such a part of an inch as the first letter of the Bible is a part of the sum of all its letters.

The bubble, however, is not of equal thickness at all points, and it is for this reason that it has the various colors. For instance, wherever the film is orange-red it measures about three one-millionths of an inch; where it is blue, eighty one-millionths of an inch; and at a point where lemon-yellow is prominent, about twenty one-millionths of an inch. Perhaps you wonder why the colors change from one part of the soap bubble to another. This is because the film of the soap-bubble evaporates and grows thinner, but unequally so at different portions. A greenish blue with a pale rose-red spot near it indicates an extreme thinness, and at such a point the film is ready to give way at the least jar.

You will be glad to know the source of the beautiful colors. Everyone is delighted with them, even if not interested by the explanation of their origin. We may say that they come from the light. Light gives color to all objects, but not exactly as it does to the soap-bubble. While light from the sun can be broken into the seven colors which we have seen in the rainbow. In that instance the raindrops separate it into its parts. A glass prism will do the same, as you may prove by looking through a glass pane from a hanging lamp. When the light reaches the surface of the soap-bubble a part is reflected from it and we see images as if on a surface as if it were a curved mirror. Another portion of the light, however, enters the film and is separated so that a part of the seven colors are thrown into the bubble, and we can see them at various portions of the opposite surface. Another part of the light, after being broken by the film, is reflected by its inner surface back to our eyes, so that we see colors at the point where the light enters.—Jacob F. Butcher, in St. Nicholas.

Electricity Made at Home.

It has been discovered that if a steel knife and a silver fork are inserted in a large orange an electric current will be generated. If the end of the fork and the end of the knife sticking from the orange are connected with an electric measuring instrument, quite a perceptible current will be seen to pass. The same kind of a battery can be made by substituting a cucumber in place of the orange. In fact, any acid fruit can be used.

In order to make a voltaic pile it is only necessary to procure ten or more pieces of zinc about one inch square, the same number of pieces of copper, and a like number of pieces of paper. The paper should be thoroughly soaked in vinegar.

First, take a piece of zinc; on it place a piece of vinegar-soaked paper, then put on a piece of copper, then a piece of paper, then another piece of zinc, and so on until all the pieces of zinc, copper and paper are used up. It is important that a piece of zinc should be on one end and a piece of copper on the other. After the pile is completed, again soak the whole slightly in vinegar, then clean it off on the outside. If the forefinger of one hand is held against one end and the forefinger of the other hand is held on the other end of the pile, quite a perceptible current will be felt. If several persons clasp hands and the persons on each end of the line touch the voltaic pile, the current will flow through the bodies of all those in position.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 18, 1898

A GRACEFUL TRIBUTE

Address of Condolence Presented to Family of Late County Councillor.

The following memorial of sympathy has been presented by a committee of the County Council consisting of Ward J. B. Pearce, ex-Warden William Anderson and ex-Warden W. H. Casement (chairman of the finance committee) to the widows of the late County Councillors John Maloney, of Douro, and John Burnham, of Ashburnham.

To the widow and family of John Maloney, late councillor for the Lakefield division of the County Council of the County of Peterborough:

The County Council of the County of Peterborough, at a session held on the 18th day of November, 1897, passed a resolution expressing their sympathy with you and tendering to you an expression of condolence in your bereavement.

The members of the County Council feel that the County has sustained a great loss by the lamented death of their late colleague, Mr. John Maloney, who was a member thereof for over a quarter of a century, and who as warden and councillor devoted his exceptional ability to the promotion of the welfare of the County.

The members of the County Council will greatly miss his genial face, as well as the assistance of his mature judgment and great experience in municipal matters.

His strict integrity, kindly disposition and readiness to assist in all measures calculated to promote the interests of the county at large, greatly endeared him to every member of the council, and every citizen of the county with their fellow citizens throughout the county.

To the widow of the late John Burnham Esq., one of Her Majesty's Council:

The Municipal Council of the County of Peterborough in session assembled the 4th day of January, 1898, beg to express to you and to your family their deep sympathy and sincere condolence in this the hour of your bereavement.

For twenty-one years your late husband was continuously a member of this council and during that time was four times consecutively elected warden of this county and we must acknowledge to you the high estimation in which your late husband and his services were held and the great obligation under which this county stands to him, and we are pleased to know that on more than one occasion in his life time this council publicly acknowledged their great indebtedness to him.

In public affairs your late husband long occupied a conspicuous and honorable position as member of the House of Commons for Canada, for the East Riding of the County of Peterborough and by all parties was recognized as being actuated with high ideals of citizenship and imbued with that love of country and of the empire to which it belongs, which has been so deep a factor in its prosperity and advancement.

Bar v. Fleasling

Mr. John Dawson, Downer's Corner, was badly engaged in ploughing yesterday. It is a very rare occurrence for the plough to be in operation so early in the season, a similar event not having taken place since 1873, when the farmers were engaged at the work during the month of February.

IRELAND'S PATRON SAINT

Celebration of the Great Festival at St. Peter's Cathedral.

St. Patrick's day was duly observed yesterday, when three masses were celebrated at St. Peter's Cathedral. Rev. Father Scanlan officiated at the 7 o'clock service, while at the 8 o'clock mass, which was attended by a crowded congregation, the celebrant was Venerable Archbishop Casey. The music rendered at the latter mass was very fine. The recessional and voluntary numbers were sung to beautiful settings of Irish melodies by Mother St. Mary, of the musical department of the convent, who presided at the organ. The convent pupils rendered "Hibernians' Champion Saint, all Hail," arranged to the music of "The Harp, that once through Tara's Hall," and "Jesus, Saviour of My Soul," to the music of "The Last Rose of Summer." They also rendered the inspiring hymn "All Hail to St. Patrick." High Mass was celebrated at 10 o'clock, when there was again a large congregation. Rev. Father O'Sullivan delivered an able discourse upon the life and labors of St. Patrick, his text being "The just shall be had in everlasting remembrance." (Psalm cxi: 7) He said it was for us to try to imitate the virtues of St. Patrick in hope that our fidelity to the faith which he preached and the earnest loving longing with which so many souls still yearn toward him, may draw down upon his land a large share of grace and light, and may the sacred trust be fulfilled in him—"the just shall be in everlasting remembrance," and if where the voice of saints and monks and doctors once rose in prayer and learning, the lowing of cattle now resounds, through her disfigured form, the day will come when Ireland, the joy of his heart, shall witness the restoration of her pristine glory.

A DISASTROUS FIRE

The Explosion of Gas in a stove the Cause of the Disaster.

Mr. Edward Webb, plasterer, of Brock street, has the sympathy of the public in the misfortune which has come upon him. At a quarter to five yesterday morning, soon after the Times went to press, the fire brigade were called to Mr. Webb's residence, a rough-cast cottage, where flames were seen issuing from the chimney. On being called, Mr. Webb, who was not resting well, arose and opened the bedroom door. He was taken by a blast of heat which drove him back into the room. He then opened the window leading from the bedroom into the shed in order to make a way of escape in this manner for his wife and himself. In the meantime Mrs. Webb had become so terror-stricken that she completely lost her presence of mind and but for her husband would have rushed out from the room into the flames. After he had succeeded in getting her out of the window and rescuing some clothing the house had to be abandoned, and although the brigade arrived a few minutes later, nothing could be saved, as the furniture which was not already burnt was so badly blistered and drenched with water as to render it valueless.

Although the contents of the house were insured for $500 in the Lancashire, London & Globe Company, Mr. Webb says his loss will be considerable. Some valuable wedding presents were destroyed.

Mr. Thomas Bradburn owned the cottage, which was insured for $500 in the London Assurance Co.

GALAXY OF LOCAL TALENT

A Successful Concert in the Opera House Last Night.

A large and appreciative audience attended the concert held in the opera house last night under the auspices of the Catholic Association of Peterborough. The lengthy and well-assorted program of local talent as published in The Times Tuesday morning was fully and creditably carried out with the exception of the last number. The Fire Brigade Band was in attendance and rendered the selection "Shaughnessy Quadrilles" in their customary good style. The second number, a tableau, "Brin Brion's Last Hour," illustrating, as explained by Mrs. M. L. Hayes, the death of this ancient Irish king, at the hands of a Danish fugitive, while engaged in a prayer of thanksgiving for his victory over the Danes, was pleasingly presented; but perhaps the realism of the scene was slightly marred by the fugitive Dane being costumed in the 57th Battalion's uniform. Brian McBride was impersonated by Mr. Angus McPherson, and Brodie the Dane by Mr. James Dillon.

The two numbers by the Catholic Glee Club were exceedingly well rendered and enthusiastically received. "The Kerry Dance" by Mrs. John McCabe was well received, and she sang in response to a recall, "Polly my Love." The star of the evening, the talented and clever elocutionist, Miss Lilly Simons, met with a perfect storm of well-merited applause. Her

The Dipper or the Dropper?

There are cough medicines that are taken as freely as a drink of water from a dipper. They are cheap medicines. Quantity does not make up for quality. It's the quality that cures. There's one medicine that's dropped, not dipped—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. There's more power in drops of this remedy than in dipperful of cheap cough syrups and elixirs. It cures Bronchitis, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, and all Colds, Coughs, and affections of the Throat and Lungs.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Enunciation is clear and distinct, her inspiration true to life, and she is undoubtedly destined to take a front place in the ranks of leading elocutionists. She gave for her first number an emotional and patriotic piece entitled "The Legend of St. Patrick," and for the recall a humorous recitation, "Miss Burdick's Music Box," which convulsed the house with laughter. In the second act she held her audience spell-bound by a faithful and soul-stirring portrayal of her masterpiece, "The Maniac," but refused to respond to repeated calls for an encore. Miss Simons is truly at home in both paths and humor.

Miss Lottie Bell's manipulation of the violin was very creditable indeed and met with demonstrative approval. "The Little Flower Girl," a recitation by Little Carrie White, caught the house, and when for a return act this little tot of six summers rendered "Pity an anxious mother," delivered in a clear, sweet, childish voice, perfectly free of embarrassment, and accompanied with appropriate gestures, the audience went fairly wild with enthusiasm. The numbers by Master Rupert Phelan, Peterborough's boy soprano, are deserving of special mention. He possesses a rich soprano voice of high range and compass, and promises to develop, with care and culture, into one of the foremost singers of the town, if not of the Dominion. He was repeatedly recalled.

The comedietta, "Kitty the Romp," was very creditably presented for amateurs. Miss Lily Simons proved the star as "Kitty," while she was ably supported by T. Begley as Lord Rosendale, whose make-up was excellent; T. Hannah as Dan O'Flynn, R. Simons as Sambo, Miss S. Kelly as Hannah, Mr. J. McCabe as Lord Percival and Miss Annie Simons as the aunt.

The double bill by R. Simons and E. Graham was fairly well rendered, as also the vocal duet, "The Gypsy Countess," by Miss N. Lewis and Mr. F. Dwyer, while the work of the F. B. orchestra proved to be up to its usual standard of excellence.

The tableau, "Ireland in the Past," was rendered by Miss May Sullivan impersonating Erin. The third tableau, "Ireland in the Future," was the most appreciable of the three, representing England, Scotland, Ireland and Canada very appropriately and picturesquely grouped. Miss M. E. Mahoney represented England, Miss Nellie McCabe Ireland, Miss Annie Cahill Scotland, and Miss Maude Cahill Canada.

The address on the history of the Home Rule movement from its inception did not receive the very earnest attention of the audience.

The House and Lot, property of Wm. Lech, 362 Hunter Street, will be offered for sale March the twenty-second, by auction. Intending purchasers may inspect the house and premises the day before, from two until four o'clock. The store between Mr. Stratton's and W. Should Come to Peterborough
The Ottawa Board of Trade are making an effort to have the Nickel Steel Company erect their refinery in Ottawa. The capital of the company is $20,000,000, and on the Directorate is Hon. Geo. A. Cox. Great effort should be made to get the company to locate in Peterborough.

Elsewhere will be found the advertisement of Mr. C. W. Mulligan, who handles the well-known Queen of Scotland, the King of Scotland, Empire and Speed King and Queen. All intending wheelmen should see his stock before purchasing.

Reliable Man Wanted
Good smart reliable man wanted to canvass the town in the interest of the Morning and Weekly Times. Must have good connection. Good salary to the right man. Apply at the Times Office.

Fire at Port Hope Carpet Factory
The upsetting of a lamp at the Port Hope Carpet Factory was the means of bringing about a fair-sized blaze. The alarm was at once given, but before the firemen arrived the fire had been extinguished, and their services were not required. A couple of cards and some other articles were destroyed, the total loss being in the neighborhood of $50.

District Jails
The Ontario Government will soon inaugurate a change in the system of jails. The intention is to have district jails instead of county jails. Then the expense would be much less, the discipline would be very much better, and generally a great improvement would be the effect. At the next session of the legislature a bill will be introduced to do away with the county jails.

A Public Meeting
We understand that a requisition is out for signatures asking the Mayor to call a public meeting to discuss a railway to Apeley. We think this rather ill-advised. The Board of Trade or Town Council should first take the matter up so that preliminaries may be arranged. A public meeting just now will be rather harmful than otherwise, and we hope the promoters will take this view of it and at least delay it.

Horses Wanted
W. J. Pearson, the well known horse dealer of Montreal, is prepared to pay the highest prices for a car load of good sound horses of every description. He is billed as follows: At the Royal Hotel Port Hope, on Monday, March 21st; White's Hotel, Peterborough, Wednesday March 23rd. Parties in the above named districts having horses to dispose of will consult their own interests by awaiting the visit of Mr. Pearson.

Work on the Canal
Preparations for resuming work on the Peterborough-Lakefield section of the Trent Valley Canal are being made. Mr. J. Lavender, the contractor for the lower section, had a rather poor season last year on account of the quantity of rain that fell. They hope to more than make up the loss this year, however. The work at Lakefield is advancing rapidly, and by the end of the summer those two sections will be approaching completion.

How to Cure All Skin Diseases
Simply apply "Swayne's Ointment." No internal medicine required. Cures tetter, eczema, itch, all eruptions on the face, hands, nose, &c., leaving the skin clear, white and healthy. Its great healing and curative powers are possessed by no other remedy. Ask your druggist for Swayne's Ointment. Lyman, Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents. Avoid substitutes.

Singing Class
Mr. J. Warburton Owens, organist at St. John's church, Peterboro, visited Lindsay several times during the past week, and has succeeded in organizing a number of our favorite singing class, the famous oratorio, "The Holy City." The first practice was held last evening and passed off very successfully. Mr. Owens has another large class at work in Peterboro, and the oratorio will be presented by the combined classes in that town early in May, and in Lindsay at a later date.—Lindsay Post.

Piles! Piles! Itching Piles
Symptoms—Moisture intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate and become very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Lyman, Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents.

Men Who are Bald
See Prof. Dorenwend, the well known Hair Goods Artist who will be at the Oriental Hotel on Wednesday March 23. His system of replacing lost hair on bald heads is really marvellous. Any doubts as to this fact can be dispelled by examining his goods. There is not the slightest trace of falseness and besides improving one's appearance, they afford protection against colds, catarrh, neuralgia, etc. The wearer never realizes that he has it on it is so light and comfortable. Over 34,000 are in use and the number is increasing daily.

Mending Their Ways
Provincial Road Inspector Campbell has received intimation that between 30 and 40 township municipalities have this year adopted his plan for making the best of the state labor system of road-making. His method is to appoint a road supervisor for the township who will be a paid official. The roads are then divided into five-mile districts and a foreman appointed for each. All the roads and road-making in the township will be under the direction of the supervisor. The township are buying machinery, and altogether, a decided forward step in the direction of good roads is evident. Mr. Campbell is booked to visit Peterborough at an early date.

The Chief of Police would welcome any information respecting the whereabouts of Frank Pedwell, aged 18 years, concerning whom his parents in Thornbury, Ontario, are anxious. Tobacco Culture

The Times was shown samples of tobacco grown in the suburbs of the town, which is very good. There is no reason why the culture of tobacco does not receive more attention than it does. Up in Essex county they have decided to send a deputation to Ottawa to try to have legislation passed, placing a duty of five cents a pound inland revenue on Canadian and United States tobacco. It is also to ask that 20 cents a pound deducted from the revenue on United States tobacco be added to the customs tariff. Tobacco raising in South Essex is quite considerable. Fifty car-loads have been shipped from Leamington to Montreal recently.

Mr. Robertson also threw out many valuable hints and illustrations of what constitutes effective advertising. He advocated its use by the professions, as well as in mercantile life. The daily press is considered the best medium for advertising.

Railway to the North

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I was very much interested in the letter which appeared in the Times of yesterday under the signature of Mr. Shewen, of Apsley. I hope that the matter will be taken at once to carry this project out. All it requires, as Mr. Shewen says, is some one to take the matter up, and the town and back country to support it. Mr. Blizard, the popular member for East Peterborough, should be invited, along with Mr. Strachan and Messrs. Lang and Kendry, to attend a meeting at which representatives from all the interested municipalities should be present.

Let there be no time lost, but get to work with a will.

I think the Board of Trade should take the initiative and start the ball rolling.

A Member Board of Trade.

Peterborough, March 17, 1898.

Strong Language From Mr. Blizard

Rev. Mr. Blizard, the evangelist, preached at Belleville last week, says the Campbellford Herald, and drew a large audience as usual. Mr. Blizard said that it had been mis-stated that he would speak that night upon "Card playing and dancing." He had already announced, however, that that address had been postponed to Friday night. He said he had preached upon those announcements in Peterborough. "Now," he said, "there is no dancing in Peterborough. You cannot get up a dance there among respectable people; and it is confined to the inmates of brothels and saloons." "Yes," he said, "I intend to prove to you that dancing originated in the brothels of Paris." There will probably be a large crowd to hear him.

A man that would make an assertion like this should be choked off, as it is utterly untrue so far as Peterborough is concerned.—Ed. Times.

Railway and River Notes

—The ice is all out of the Little Lake.

—The North Star will make her initial trip of the season next week.

—The C. P. R. will erect a thirty thou sand dollar stone and brick station at MacAdam Junction, and will light the work-shops and yard by electricity.

—It is said the C. P. R. will double track the section of the road between Toronto and Montreal, the increase of traffic having made this necessary.

—There was to have been an excursion to-day of sightseers to the ice bridge at Niagara Falls, but the Grand Trunk were advised by telegram that the bridge had melted away, and so the excursion was cancelled.

—Messrs. Nash, L. Piper & Son, of Toronto, are the inventors and patentees of a revolving signal lamp which the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific railways may adopt. This lamp is to be placed on the cupola of the caboose of a freight train, and may be operated by a brakeman inside the car. The colors which the lamp shows are red, green and large or small disk white. The special feature of the lamp is that its various colors may be set to signal in any direction.

—Mr. D. A. Starr will meet the Council in committee the whole to-night to discuss the terms of the proposed Street Railway deal.

The Dipper or the Dropper?

There are cough medicines that are taken as freely as a drink of water from a dipper. They are cheap medicines. Quantity does not make up for quality. It's the quality that cures. There's one medicine that's dropped, not dipped—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. There's more power in drops of this remedy than in dipperfuls of cheap cough syrups and elixirs. It cures Bronchitis, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, and all Colds, Coughs, and affections of the Throat and Lungs.

Morning Times

PETERBOROUGH, JAN. 19, 1898

GREAT BRITAIN'S PREMIER

The illness of Lord Salisbury, one of the greatest if not the greatest and the most powerful of diplomatists, is a matter of sincere regret upon personal as well as national grounds. England's Premier possesses an individuality esteemed and respected throughout the civilized world; and though perhaps those foreign nations who venture to tread upon his imperial corns do not altogether appreciate his strength, they cannot but admire and respect the man who so ably controls the foreign policy of the most potential empire extant, and exercises an all-important influence in the political affairs of the world. That man is now on the sick list, and newspapers are busily engaged in discussing whether his absence from England at a critical time makes for peace or war, the question being the more complicated by the absence on sick leave also of Russia's Foreign Minister. Of course the hand of a trained engineer on the throttle inspires confidence that the train will likely keep the track; but if, as we do not at all believe, the track leads to war, the absence of the skilled drivers may delay the arrival at the awful destination, for it is not credible that either government would care to plunge into war with the masters of their respective foreign policies incapacitated for foreign service.

We confess that we have always digested newspaper speculations upon war prospects with the proverbial allowance of salt—"cum grano Salis"—bury, we might say, if we may be allowed to perpetrate so shocking a joke. We have sufficient confidence in the strength of Lord Salisbury and in the respect which he inspires amongst foreign nations to believe that a European war is not at our doors just yet. In reading the writings of some enterprising newspaper correspondents one would imagine that the hopes and fears of European diplomatists entrusted to the tender confidences of the Press. Apart from these considerations, however, we regard the continued increase in the armaments of the several nations as an almost distinct guarantee of peace. The old maxim, "If you wish peace, prepare for war," is a sound one. These martial preparations have, too, their usefulness. They provide a means of employment for many persons who would otherwise be in houses of refuge.

Those who fear danger from Lord Salisbury's enforced absence may take heart from the knowledge that the continuity of his policy will be pursued by his nephew, Mr. Arthur Balfour, the most distinguished of young English statesmen, and one best fitted to follow the lines upon which his uncle has been working. Lord Salisbury has been a long time concerned in the direction of England's foreign policy, and is now a man closely approaching the allotted span of three score years and ten. We must therefore become accustomed to looking for a successor, though there is an earnest hope that the realization of this necessity may be long delayed.

RUSSIA WILL HAVE A NAVY

Russia has ordered the immediate expenditure of ninety million roubles for the construction of warships, a sum representing about $70,000,000, the purchase price of eighteen battleships. This does not represent a great fleet, nor will its addition make Russia a naval power of the first importance. The great significance that lies in its expenditure is the fact that to raise this amount no loan is asked, no credits sought for outside of Russia itself.

Hitherto the weakness of Russia has been regarded as her lack of money to prosecute her widely-reaching schemes of territorial acquisition. Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Gladstone, even Lord Salisbury himself, and notably Mr Chamberlain, have always sought to impress their faith upon England, Russia's natural antagonist, that the Czar could never be a real enemy because he had neither money nor credit.

The credit of the Russian Empire could be depreciated in foreign money markets by various influences which are no beyond the touch of English diplomacy, but the national exchequer that can yield up so considerable a sum as twenty-seven millions upon the imperial call is no sign of an empty cash box.

Russia has far-reaching projects of imperial extension. To the east she has reached her hand till it is dipped in the yellow seas of China, and in that direction she is opposed by a natural obstacle as well as by the determined front of Japan and the jealousies of European powers that have materialized in the creasing fleets. To face them a great and mighty navy is needed, and the fleet this sum will pay for will put her on nearly equal footing with those it will measure force with in the East. It is a fact that coast along that Russia has use for naval power, and in her growing strength is the menace to that uneasy peace which is the condition of the Orient to-day. But so long as others maintain their strength, that peace will not be disturbed.

Electricity is in the air.

The sturdy Government are hanging on to the meat.

The river has been pretty full of late—of water, not whiskey.

We are told that "Spain will not pay." She is evidently not in a (Spain) mood.

There is a tide in the affairs of Mann which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune.

Investors in Spain's money obligations want to sell them Cuba also is anxious to get rid of its Spanish bonds.

Mr. Deatty and Mr. Tucker may argue from cats having nine lives that its generally healthful to be on the fence.

It is time that piggery joke was stuck St. John got it in the neck, and so did the Humber pigs. Let us forget them both.

The German Emperor appears to no more advantage in his dislike of the American horse than he does in mounting his own high one.

King Alfonso of Spain will hardly have much say in the matter, but he's not too young nor are any too old to be taught that war is not child's play.

The early spring will give the town street repairs an admirable opportunity to get the streets in good condition before the advent of winter. And from present appearances they will require all the time for this purpose.

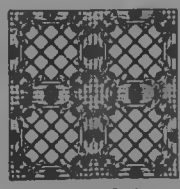

Sir Charles Tupper in concluding a speech the other day in Parliament averred that nothing could confer a greater pleasure upon him personally than to be relieved of the responsibilities and duties attaching to his present position as leader of the opposition. And this very result would be acceptable to a large number of his followers.

The modesty of public men does not as a rule allow them to show a retiring disposition. The case of the Hon. J. M. Gibson was, immediately after his defeat, thought to be an exception, but just now it looks as if he possessed that British spirit which never knows defeat. What a pity he does not possess also an Englishman's breadth of sympathy by seeing beyond his family circle.

THE VILLAGE SMITH STANDS

No longer under that chestnut tree The village smithy stands,
For a wealthy foundry company Owns all the adjacent lands,
And the smith works in their factory With hundreds of other hands.

His hair is white, his form is stooped— A toil-worn, poor old man;
There is little to get, but he's working yet.

He does the best he can; But just to live and get along Is as much as he can plan.

Week in, week out, from morn till night, He minds, one of a row
Of men who tend the big machines That clatter, rumbling on,
Like the mills of the relentless gods Grinding out human woe.

The noises from the lively street Are strangled in that roar,
And none from outside dare set foot Within the factory door,
For signs "Keep out!" "No talking here!" The walls are painted o'er.

The "Yellow" journal and a pipe, Are his remaining joys;
His former church has grown so "small" He hates the preacher's voice,
He stays at home and reads and smokes And tals of kins absent boys.

His widowed daughter keeps his house— Three rooms of little size.
They often talk of the good old times, And she, poor creature, cries;
And of "Mother" they say "tis well for That in the grave she lies.

Toiling, resting, but to toil, Though life draws to its close,
His very soul within him crushed With labor's life-time woes,
In dull content with discontent, On, to his grave he goes.

Thanks, thanks, my poor, hard-working friend, For what your life has taught!
Your "honest toil" is taught— That is the golden thought!
"The worker makes but the schemer gets!"

KEENE.

Death has again visited our neighborhood in the person of Annie, only daughter of John H. McIntyre. The deceased was stricken with brain fever about two weeks ago and was a great sufferer until Thursday the 10th inst., when death relieved her from all earthly pain and trouble. She was twenty years of age and a general favorite with both old and young and will be sadly missed by all who knew her on account of her amiable and cheerful disposition. A very large concourse of relatives and friends followed her remains to Keene cemetery on Saturday, where her body was deposited in its final resting place. We all join in sending our heart-felt sympathy to the sorrowing parents and family and trust that their great loss will be but a gain.

I have not been favored this week with the minutes of the Lime Juice Club, but in all probability, will favor you with a full report next week. The ice on our river is fast disappearing and in a few days navigation will open here.

One of our enterprising young men in this village has built a small steamer and no doubt in the near future will have her launched and christened. We have not as yet ascertained for a certainty the choice name for her, but will report particulars later.

By present indications farmers will soon be able to commence their spring work. If all about looks fresh and green, and if the weather proves favorable no doubt the crop will be good.

Mistress, severely—if such a thing occurs again, Norah, I shall have to get another servant.
Norah—I wish ye would—there's easily enough work for two uv us.

Science in Real Life Stranger

The last time I thought of a little story that tends to suggest a bit of science in real life stranger than fiction. It is a story that tends to suggest a bit of science in real life stranger than fiction. It is a story that tends to suggest a bit of science in real life stranger than fiction.

There is a good and benevolent lady in town who is good and benevolent. She is a lady who is good and benevolent. She is a lady who is good and benevolent.

Very well, Sarah, you know I have always been a good and benevolent lady. I have always been a good and benevolent lady. I have always been a good and benevolent lady.

And you wouldn't see his young self, mum? Oh that's really necessary, I should think. You can give him a good morning breakfast, can't you, Sarah?

Certainly, mum. I'll be sure to do so. I'll be sure to do so. I'll be sure to do so. I'll be sure to do so.

But I'm afraid, mum, that young Duke is very anxious to see you. He says he's got a letter from you. He says he's got a letter from you.

"RUN DOWN"

A clock that needs winding runs down because its motive energy is exhausted. Men and women who have been busy—who have worked too hard, or have been worried too much, or who have neglected to care for their physical health, or who have been too much indoors during the winter months—"run down" also. They need a Tonic.

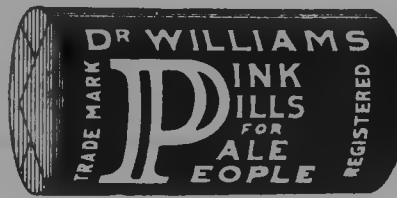

Are you "run down" in health? If you are quickly tired, lack energy, feel weak in the back, always want something to lean upon, have a dull backache, or you do not feel like doing your best, it is a Tonic you need.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People

will supply just the energy you require. When you feel as if rest and a soft sofa are the only desirable things in the world; when you cannot be troubled even to hold up your head—then you need Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to make you feel bright, active and full of energy. They are not a purgative medicine. They make people strong.

You must get the REAL Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, or it is of no use.

Substitutes will do you no good and may do you harm. The genuine pills are always put up in a package just like this.

The wrapper around each box is printed with Red Ink on white paper.

Sold by all dealers in medicine, or will be sent post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

We consulted a physician, who prescribed for her, and for a time she seemed to improve a little, then the improvement ceased, and she became worse and worse."

Schneider THE JEWELER

The Dominion practically unknown in those quarters—Canada's Products Illustrated as Coming From the States—Important and Interesting Conclusions—Enlightened

(Special to the Times.) OTTAWA, Mar. 19.

Mr. Edmund E. Sheppard, of Toronto, who was the Canadian Commissioner to Mexico and South America, has prepared his final report to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Sir Richard Cartwright.

In summing up his report, Mr. Sheppard says that the name of the Dominion of Canada does not appear in the statistics of any country. Ships sailing from a Canadian port are so registered as these foreign ports when they appear in the books of the foreign consul, and this is the end of it.

CANADA NOT WELL KNOWN. Canadian goods are entered as coming from the United Kingdom; if from a United States port, as coming from that country. The result of this is that Canadian goods, as such, are practically, if not absolutely, unknown to the people, and are rarely recognized as such by the merchants handling them.

As far as Mr. Sheppard could find out, freights below the equator are as cheap by way of the United Kingdom as by sailing ship or occasional steamers. Around Cape Horn, and as far north as Guayaquil, the freights are cheaper by Great Britain or Germany than by New York.

If Canada makes London her clearing house, he says, then the products which go there and are afterwards shipped to the Southern countries are credited to Britain. That portion of the Canadian trade which goes by the United States is credited to the United States. For this, Canadians are largely to blame themselves. They conceal their business, so as to prevent rivals from getting a share of the trade.

HAS BENEFITED THE STATES. It is probably worth while urging this matter to the attention of the United States when they again point to the great advantage which Canada obtains from the bonding privileges. By means of a frequent use of this privilege, Canadian exporters have placed themselves at the mercy of United States middlemen, railway shippers and carriers by sea. The use of this by Canada has also built up United States exports and discrediting points.

If Canada could do business directly, the volume of trade would be enormously increased. For Canada to use her own ports for the shipment of collections of goods it would encourage the Canadian people to believe in themselves, and the people of the Southern countries to believe in Canada, and both would be in this way benefited. Canada would also cease paying tribute to the United States in freights, terminal charges, warehousing, and for sea-going transportation in out-of-date ships.

"Such a system," says Mr. Sheppard, in conclusion, "would probably reduce the cost of Canadian exports more than enough to send them around by Great Britain, where they would be carried in ships of our own build, even by our own people, burning our own coal and flying our own flag."

American Trade Benefited by Canadian Commerce

MR. SHEPPARD'S REPORT

What the Trade Commissioner to South and Central America Says

(Special to the Times.) OTTAWA, Mar. 19.

HIS BRAIN FAGGED

LORD SALISBURY PLAYED OUT—YOUNG MR. CURZON BOON TO ENTER THE CABINET.

(Special to the Times.) London, March 19.—Interest now centers in the March 19th of Salisbury's health, and the air is full of rumors of impending changes in the Cabinet.

The Premier is suffering from depression and a form of "brain fog." It is believed he will remain Premier, but the reconstruction of the Cabinet is probable during the Easter recess.

The temporary installment of Mr. A. J. Balfour at the head of the Foreign Office exercises the minds of all parties. Mr. Balfour has no special training for listening for foreign affairs, but he is warmly in sympathy with his uncle's views in regard to the present troubling international relations.

It is regarded as certain that Mr. George N. Curzon will be admitted to the Cabinet at the first opportunity. Even his political opponents and intimate weekly papers are sounding his praises.

MONTREAL IS THREATENED

(Special to the Times.) MONTREAL, March 19.

The water in the St. Lawrence is rising rapidly, as the result of a big ice shore early this morning. Fears are entertained of a serious flood, as the city authorities have publicly announced that the dyke is not waterproof. If the water once gets through it—and it is now only a little over a foot below the dyke—the city will be in a perilous position, for the water once in will not be able to escape.

Court is Still at Work—Nothing Will be Made Public for Some Time

(Special to the Times.) Washington, March 19.—Lieut. Holmes of the Maine arrived here this morning and had a protracted interview with Secretary Long.

The Vickersburg has left St. Thomas for Hampton Roads to-day. The Burefoot has arrived at Azores on her way to the United States.

TRADERS ANXIOUS

CAPTAIN SAMPSON SAYS THE NAVAL COURT IS STILL AT WORK.

New York, March 19.—There are numerous opinions expressed as to when the Maine report will be received. Judge Day says that it will come on Monday.

Captain Sampson is reported as saying that the court is still at work and it is impossible to say when the report will be ready.

Everybody recognizes that everything depends on what the report will show and there is a disinclination to trade on the exchange until it appears.

Navigation hummed up. New York, March 19.—Prospects for the settlement of the entire Cuban problem by diplomatic agencies were never brighter, despite the energetic preparation for defense which both Spain and the United States are carrying on, says The Herald.

At the brink of war both nations have halted. Spain has agreed to stop her torpedo fleet at the Canaries. The United States will gradually withdraw the vessels of the North Atlantic squadron from the vicinity of Cuba. By this agreement the United States has the Spanish Government in a position where a further westward movement of the torpedo flotilla could be considered an act of war.

Further than this, Spain has agreed to concede everything the Cubans demand, is the statement, except hauling down her flag.

The suggestion, too, has been offered that the services of this country would be acceptable in helping to re-establish peace in the island of Cuba. President McKinley considers that the fates proclaimed the independence of Cuba.

Senor Don Luis Pardo de Bernabe y Leon, Spanish Minister, has declared that this country will not necessarily regard the recognition of Cuban independence as a casus belli. On the other hand, he declares, armed intervention by the United States to end the war in Cuba would certainly be a casus belli.

"The Niagara" for War Purposes. New York, March 19.—The Herald to-day publishes the announcement that Howard Gould the owner of the Niagara going steam yacht Niagara, now nearing completion at the yard of Harland and Hollingsworth Company, Wilmington, Del., will surrender his vessel to the Government in the event of hostilities between the United States and Spain.

Free Entry of Ammunition. Washington, March 19.—A (the opening of the session of the House of Representatives today Mr. Dingley, the floor leader of the majority, offered the bill reported from the Ways and Means Committee, providing for the free entry into this country of guns, ammunition and other naval supplies and war material purchased abroad.

Until January 1st, 1899, he explained, the committee had unanimously reported the bill. It was asked for by the Secretary of War and Navy. The bill was passed without division.

SPAIN'S HONOR AT STAKE

IMPOSSIBLE FOR HER TO PAY COMPENSATION FOR THE MAINE.

Vienna, March 19.—The Neue Freie Presse publishes an interview with a Spanish statesman, evidently the Marquis de Hoyos, the Spanish ambassador, in which he expressed the opinion that Spain would rather have war with the United States than pay compensation for the Maine, for by the latter course she would forfeit her honor through an admission of guilt which would cause her name from the list of civilized nations.

It could not be England's interest to see the Spaniards expelled from Cuba, as there might arise at Washington an inclination to declare Canada's independence. If, during a war the United States would incite the Philippines to revolt Spain could revenge herself by raising revolts in the American Southern States.

The other features of the interview virtually repeat the statements attributed to Senor Cipriano del Mazo, Spanish ambassador to Italy, in the recent interview with him published in the Rome Tribuna.

Court of Inquiry in Brazil. Key West, March 19.—The United States Court of Inquiry into the loss of the battleship Maine continues its session to-day on board the United States battleship Iowa.

Spain Buys a Steam Yacht. Nice, March 19.—It is rumored that Spain has purchased the steam yacht Giralda, belonging to Mr. Hugh McCalmont, M.P., the well-known English sportsman. The Giralda is 280 feet long, 35 feet beam, 18 feet deep and was built at Glasgow in 1894. Her launch measurement is 1,900 tons.

The greater includes the less. Hood's Saraparilla cures scrofula, and may be depended upon to cure boils and pimples.

Annual report of the Department of Railways & Canals

INTERESTING DETAILS

Mr. Richard B. Rogers, Superintendent Engineer, Makes His Report

Description of Work—Operation and Maintenance New Works—The Financial Side of the Question What the Contractors Have Done and Have Yet to do

The annual report of the Department of Railways and Canals for the past fiscal year has just been issued, and from it we present our readers with a few interesting extracts.

WHAT THE SUPERINTENDING ENGINEER SAYS.

In submitting his annual report, dated from Peterborough, 1st September, 1897, Mr. Richard B. Rogers says:

"The Trent Canal is a term applied to several water stretches between the Bay of Quinte on Lake Ontario and Georgian Bay on Lake Huron, which, however, in their present condition do not form a continuous line of navigation. The object of the present works is to connect these several water stretches so as to make a continuous line of navigation for large traffic of six feet draught between Lake Ontario and Georgian Bay. The total distance between the two points is about 200 miles, but by utilizing the numerous lakes and rivers and taking advantage of the lay of the land to make flooded rapids it is hoped that no more than 15 to 20 miles will be actual canal. Hamilton in his memorable march through Canada followed the line of this proposed canal, and it has since been used by the Indians and fur traders in their excursions between the upper lakes and tide water. The Imperial Government as far back as 1835 chose this route as being the most natural and feasible to make a waterway between Lake Ontario and Lake Huron, and they spent a considerable amount of money to accomplish this object. The works then constructed have ever since been utilized. When the two divisions at present under construction are completed, there will be a continuous completed line of navigation of about 160 miles in length and about the same distance of lateral navigation between the Falls and the ports on Lake Huron."

"Owing to the immense country drained and the country brought every year more cleared the proper regulation of the water under the present system becomes more difficult. On account of the new works at present being constructed between Lakefield and Peterborough it was necessary to interfere somewhat with the regular flow of the river in order that the works might be proceeded with. Navigation closed on the central reach 28th November, 1896, and opened again the 19th April, 1897. On the lower reach navigation closed on the 20th November and opened again the 13th April, 1897. The water was maintained at a navigable height on all the reaches except that above Hoboyagon, where owing to the leakage of a private dam and the flow of water coming down from above being reduced for a time the water fell for a few days below the ordinary height."

"The number of lockages was 2,646, which, however, does not fairly represent the traffic on the canal, as outside the locks the larger stretches of the routes do not pass through any locks, so no records are kept."

The repairs executed included the following: Peterborough.—The guard beams and piers to the upper entrance of the lock at Peterborough were overhauled and put in first class condition. The sluices of the dam were also repaired.

Lakefield.—The plank on the landing pier of which was completely rotten, was renewed as it was dangerous to land upon. It is proposed to fill this pier in with rock and quarry waste and gravel.

Referring to the work of construction, Mr. Rogers says: "This work on this section consists for the most part in excavating five short cuts across the points of land at the heads of the river, and the construction of the necessary locks (five in number) to overcome the difference of levels and of four dams to hold the water on the several reaches and of the raising of roads in lieu of ferries which will be flooded. The excavation for the several cuts, locks and dams on this section is about completed, with the exception of that at Lakefield which is rock and will be proceeded with during the winter and by completed in the spring. Locks No. 4 and 5 have been completed, being built wholly of concrete. Lock No

PUBLIC LIBRARIES

The Interior is a religious publication of Chicago that contains a paper by Mr. James Buckman, which advances the theory that public libraries are demoralizing. He will find many to differ, but it must be admitted that he argues his case plausibly. He first argues for the individual ownership of books on the ethical ground that ownership of a book is apt to make one crave to become thoroughly possessed of its contents, and so far the taking of a book from the public library is a demoralizing agency. The answer to that would be that the thorough study of a book might also be a demoralizing agency if the contents of the book were immoral in their tendency, and the man who really loves books will be sure to have some of his own, library or no library. But Mr. Buckman goes further. He says:

"The influence of the public library is distinctly demoralizing, it seems to me, in the license it affords to young people especially, of unlimited indulgence in books of light and ephemeral character—chiefly, of course, fiction. Nine-tenths of all the books taken from public libraries, by readers between the ages of fifteen and thirty, are stories. The very opportunity for such light reading—which would be obtainable in no other way—is immoral in its effect."

"Aside from the time wasted in this profitless devouring of fiction, the mental and moral enervation of reading to excess that which leaves no real intellectual furnishing is very great. It is like a diet composed solely of liquid stimulants. What little quickening the mind gets is through absorption. There is no substance to be digested and gradually assimilated into new and healthful tissue."

The tendency of all, he argues, is to make a person superficial, slipshod, and lacking in thoroughness in other relations of life. The skimmer, the jack-of-all-books, the non-appropriate reader is apt to be a student lacking in grasp and thoroughness. Whatever his work may be, wrong habits of reading will have a tendency to make him botch it. With this conclusion we do not altogether agree. Sir Walter Scott read everything he could get hold of, and a distinguished member of the Canadian Royal Society, a gentleman who is known the world over as a specialist in his line, once confessed to the writer that he read everything from the Indian fighting dime novel to the most profound works on science or theology—and he added that he had never come across a book so trashy that he had not obtained some information, however trivial, or an idea that had not previously occurred to him.

Mr. Gladstone cannot live forever, although the British public would have it that way. The great statesman is eighty-six, and though his mind is clear, his constitution is debile. From the Libbyson Independent: Strayed—in to the premises of this journal, a misbegotten cat. It is black as ebony, has a frame like a rake, and its character is much the same. It has a happy knack of making itself perfectly at home, and scared the old lady out of the junior register when he threw himself into the sporting editor's chair, and landed first base on the unobserved cat. There was some pretty lively clawing for awhile. The cat made remarks. So did the junior. It purrs and croons around in the most affectionate way when a flavor of meat is in the air, and it has a strong propensity for musing the disorderly order of our table, from which it might be inferred that it is of the female persuasion. It takes kindly to literature—in the waste paper basket—and has a penchant for dipping its tail into the ink pot and drawing naps of the Yukon over writing paper, unfinished copy, and anything in reach. The owner can have the cat on paying for a $3 roller it clawed to pieces, and no proof of property will be required.

The Ottawa Journal says: Peterborough has one decided advantage over Ottawa in the fight for the provincial seat of the G.W.A. Peterborough will get a big sympathy vote, by mail, from towns that are not particular where the meet goes. Peterborough is stirring up the sympathy racket for all it is worth, and its big argument for the provincial seat is that it has twice been defeated for the Dominion seat, and is very quick in not giving up the fight. Of course this kind of argument is quite legitimate, and as it will help Peterborough, the cyclist of that town cannot be blamed for using it. However, the day is past when matters of this kind will be decided on sentiment alone, and the great body of wheelmen are more likely to look at the suitability of the places for holding a meet. When this matter is brought to the front, then Ottawa's stock goes up. There is no question as to which place is more suitable. Ottawa, with one of the fastest quarter-mile bicycle tracks in the country, certainly deserves recognition over a place that has nothing else to offer than a horse track. It has been found, too, that small places cannot offer the proper hotel accommodation, and in this respect Ottawa is likely to benefit by the vote of wheelmen. To contend with indifferent accommodation in Waterloo one year and in Chatham another. Wheelmen are coming around to the view that before a town is given the meet it must be able to take care of it, and it is this view that is likely to help Ottawa very largely.

POLITICS IN THE MILITIA

A Charge That Partyism has Entered into Promotion

Conservatives Turned Down—Liberal Junior Major Advanced Over the Head of the Senior, a Conservative

(Special to the Times.)

The military promotions which were announced in the Gazette to-day may cause an amount of satisfaction to many persons, but in one particular place there is a little surprise, and the result may be discussed in the ranks. Col. Kearns retired from command of the 20th Batt., Halton. Next in the list of promotions was Major W. P. Applebe of Stewartstown, and next to him was Major G. S. Goodwillie, of Georgetown. This morning the announcement for the 20th Batt., Halton, is that Major Goodwillie is to be made Lieutenant-Colonel. This will, no doubt, cause surprise. A regulation was made some time ago that majors who had qualified before 1883 must qualify again before promotion. Major Goodwillie did qualify again. When it was known that Col. Kearns on account of length of service, would retire, Major Applebe thought it well to requalify. He accordingly came down to Toronto some time ago and began active work at the Fort. He believed that he had been promised an extension of time, and no appointment would be made until he would be prepared, which would be within a few weeks now.

While Major Applebe was working at the Fort the appointment was made. He was in entire ignorance of it until this morning, when he noticed it in the papers.

The friends of Major Applebe say that the appointment is a political one, and that he is turned down because he is a Conservative, and that Col. Goodwillie was promoted because he was not a Conservative.

In support of this, they point to the action taken in the 30th Batt., Wellington Rifles. The situation was precisely the same, but there Col. White has not retired, nor will he until Major John Mutrie, M.P.P., has had time to qualify.

ELECTRICITY AND CROPS

THE CURRENT HELPS THINGS TO GROW WITH GOOD RESULTS.

Frenchmen Know the Secret—Seeds, Flowers, Grapes, Strawberries and Vegetables Showing Extraordinary Vigor When Electricity is Applied.

It has long been known that the electricity in the atmosphere plays an important part in the stimulation of vegetable growth, but hitherto no practical use has been made of this knowledge.

The results recently obtained by some French scientists, who have been experimenting with the effects of electricity on plants indicate that a most valuable aid to agriculture has been discovered. A plant deprived of atmospheric electricity by covering it with a network of fine steel wires soon withers away and dies; when artificially stimulated by an electric current it blossoms far more vigor than in a normal condition.

With these data to work upon, the experimenters moistened seeds with water and then subjected them to the influence of an electric current. The seeds thus treated grew with far more vigor and came to maturity sooner than those not so treated. They even succeeded in making daisies grow in a very unusual manner.

Pears, beans and maize grew with astonishing swiftness when treated with the powerful current of a Ruhmkorff coil and the yield was greater than ordinary. Experiments with batteries were not so successful when the current was passed through the earth, because of the difference in the resistance of the soil in various places to the passage of the current. The resulting crop was uneven in character, according as one particular section received more or less of the electric current. With the powerful electrical machines much more satisfactory results were obtained. Strawberries in particular were ripened in a remarkably short time.

Electrical machines are far too expensive, however, for a farmer to use, and though all right in theory they are too costly in practice.

The new invention is called the geomagnetizer, and consists of an ordinary pole forty or fifty feet high, surmounted with a chevron of copper spikes, designed to act as a collector of atmospheric electricity. This collector is insulated from the pole by a porcelain knob, and connects with a copper wire (also insulated from the pole), which transmits the current to a network of wires which are laid under the soil at a depth of about six feet. These wires are made of galvanized iron, and their cost is not large.

By the use of this apparatus the production on a given area has been increased 80 per cent. The grapes from vineyards in which the geomagnetizer is used are richer in sugar and alcohol than ordinary grapes. Flowers have a stronger perfume also when stimulated in this manner.

The exact chemical action which the current has upon fruits and vegetables cannot be determined. It is only certain that such action takes place. Some hold that it acts by aiding the plants to assimilate the acids of the atmosphere, while others think that it favors the assimilation of certain mineral salts in the soil. The experiment can be tried on any lawn or flower bed so long as the pole is away from the house. If too close it acts as a lightning conductor, but without giving any protection.

It is estimated that a geomagnetizer sixty feet high will enrich the soil to the same degree as ten times its cost in manure. At the present time a successful farmer has to be something of a chemist, and it now seems as though he will have to be an electrician, too.

A NEW CURE FOR ERYSIPELAS.

Colorless Liquid With an Extraordinary Name Dr. Marmorek Has Made.

It is reported that a Parisian physician, Marmorek by name, has discovered a new serum for the cure of erysipelas, puerperal fever and bronchial pneumonia. This recently discovered remedy has been given the peculiar and lengthy name of Anti-streptococcic. It has been seen at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, and is a thin, colorless liquid, resembling water in almost every detail. No word has come so far as to its success or whether any really definite cures have been made.

As a matter of fact, there is only a very small quantity of it as yet in existence—little more than a tiny vialful, indeed, but this is sufficient to have aroused pretty nearly all Paris—that section of it it least which takes an interest in medical affairs and in the science of curing disease—into making frequent inquiries and regarding the discovery as of great practical importance. Dr. Marmorek says that he is best on every hand with requests for a small quantity of the serum on the part of both physicians and sufferers, and he has been obliged to shut out the public and the medical fraternity for a time until he has prepared more of the precious liquid.

His reason for so acting is his remembrance of the time of the discovery of the antitoxine cure, when the institute was besieged by anxious crowds demanding the new remedy and offering large sums of money for even a little of it. When the doctors then explained to them that it was impossible to give them what they asked for because there was no supply of it on hand, the crowd returned and upbraided the Pasteur physicians violently, calling them unhuman and brutal. Dr. Marmorek is anxious that such a scene shall not occur in connection with his discovery. In a month and a half Marmorek claims that he will have an ample supply and will meet all demands that may be made upon him.

Deadly Work of the New Bullet.
Sir Benjamin Baker, in a paper on "War and Engineering," calls attention to the devastation which the small-bore rifle effects in the human body. He says: "The magazine rifle bullet, though no larger in diameter than a lead pencil, does not simply perforate a bone, but the part is always pounded; fragments are frequently carried out through the wound of exit, which is commonly converted into a gaping orifice, the muscles are pulped, and, in fact, the limb mangled and damaged beyond repair." It may not unreasonably be contended, therefore, that by supplying soldiers with a weapon which kills or maims for life everyone a bone of whose body is touched by a bullet even at a mile's distance, and further, by making victors and vanquished suffer equally, and the cost of killing a man to be incomparably greater than of old, engineering science has done more to make war unpopular than all the army tallies of the world will ever be able to undo, however much they may endeavor to distract attention.

HOW CHILDREN USE MONEY

Dr. George E. Dawson, of Springfield, Gives Some Curious Facts.

Dr. George E. Dawson of the Bible Normal College, has classified the answers received from 1307 pupils of the public schools of this city, given in response to the question, "If you had $5, all your own, what would you do with it?"

Of those who passed in answers 689 were boys and 618 were girls, their ages ranging from 5 to 16. The answers are grouped under nine general heads: 44 per cent. would deposit the money in a bank, 13.8 per cent. would buy clothing, 2.2 per cent. would buy something to eat, 15.3 per cent. would buy toys and other means of amusement, 2.1 per cent. would buy jewelry and finery, 9 of 1 per cent. would buy firearms, 1.7 per cent. would spend for travel, 1.4 per cent. would spend for other things and 5 per cent. would buy books, etc. It is interesting to note the large per cent. who express a disposition to save. Dr. Dawson attributes this largely to the suggestion of the children; the results in this respect resemble those obtained in other fields of experiment. While the children do not realize the full significance of saving, the idea has been engrafted upon their minds and is bound to have its influence. The fact that this idea of saving has been thus forcibly impressed upon the minds of so many is very significant and gives us a hint of the immense influence of public instruction.

In noting the per cent. of those who would buy clothing it should be remembered that many of the children were in urgent need of something better to wear. Those who voted for something to eat were mostly under 17 years of age, in the class who would prefer amusements, the girls usually expressed a wish for dolls and doll carriages, while the boys mostly desired pigeons, rabbits or other pets. In regard to travel, the figures show that as children grow older the desire to go out into the world increases rapidly, reaching its height at about the beginning of adolescence. The desire shown by the boys for firearms is an expression of the hunting instinct that awakens when they are 10 or 12. At that age boys like to get hold of books of hunting and adventure. The tendency to buy books increases steadily as the children grow older. This class numbers about twice as many girls as boys. The class who manifest a feeling of altruism also numbers more girls than boys, showing that the greater generosity of women is strikingly manifest even at an early age.

THE BIG NICKEL COMPANY

WILL GO WHERE IT CAN GET SUPPLIES MOST CHEAPLY.

(Special to the Times.)

Ottawa, March 18.—John Patterson of Hamilton, the secretary of the $20,000,000 nickel refining company, which has lately secured incorporation in the city. Mr. Patterson says that the location of the refineries has not yet been decided upon, although several sites are in view. "The situation of the refineries is purely the company's affair," said Mr. Patterson, this morning. "We shall go where we can get supplies most cheaply and quickly. There seems to be a belief that we can be induced to settle in the city offering the largest bonus. This is a pure misapprehension. We are looking for no bonus in any shape or form, and we shall not be affected by any proposition in this direction. The men who are shareholders have asked me to make this plain. The organization is too large to be affected by any offer of either money grant or special privileges. We intend to buy where it suits us, and the announcement of the location will not be made until after the purchase is made. If Mr. Fielding's amendments to the tariff be brought down soon enough, we shall be at work within a few weeks. All we want now is an enactment that there shall be on our Canadian nickel ore and matte a countervailing export duty. We are to get this the day the tariff is brought down."

THE WHY AND WHEREFORE

The Court of Appeal's Judgment in a Local Case

In the appeal, case of Yelland versus Yelland, Mr. Justice O'Ster, after setting out the facts as to the late Dr. Yelland having upwards of six years before his death obtained a certificate in the Canadian Order of Foresters for $1,000, payable to the next of kin, said: "The defendant's contention is that (1) that the certificate should be read and construed as if the deceased had been designated therein as the beneficiary in accordance with the terms of his application, the insertion by the Society of the next of kin as such, having been unauthorized by him and not adopted or ratified by him and the contract issued by the Society not being the contract he applied for or accepted. If the contract was read as thus contained for the money payable under it to pass to the defendant, the executors under the will as part of the residue, and be held by them as such, subject to the trusts of the will; (2) in the alternative it is contended that inasmuch as the certificate is expressed to be subject not only to the Society and by-law of the Society then in force, but to such amendments and alterations as might hereafter be legally adopted, the effect of the Rule or By-law No. 1 of 1895, above mentioned is that next of kin are no longer by that designation capable of being beneficiaries under the Rules of the Society, and therefore that such designation must, from the time that rule was passed, be read out of the certificate, and that the money would then be payable to the wife and child of the deceased in equal shares."

"In my opinion neither of these contentions is entitled to prevail. As to the first, the action is not one for the reformation of the Certificate. If there was any contract between the deceased and the Society it is now represented by the certificate alone. Whether the deceased intended it or not was a question of fact to be determined by the Trial Judge and the fact that he received it from the Society and retained it until his death nearly six years afterwards was quite enough to warrant any tribunal in finding that he was satisfied with it in the form in which it issued. It must now be construed in accordance with its terms so far as these terms are not controlled by any rule of this society which may be imported into it. If the rules of 1895 do not qualify or alter it, the decision of the learned Trial Judge is right. I find that these rules do not affect the certificate in the slightest degree. I concede that the deceased was bound by such rules and, if that were necessary, that he had notice of them. I should, however, hesitate long before coming to the conclusion that by force of such rules a formal contract between the Society and the deceased could be effected so as to change the person or beneficiaries which had been nominated as beneficiaries under rules then existing. Here by the express terms of the original rule next of kin are named as the beneficiaries to whom the money of the endowment may be paid. They are omitted from the rule of 1895, but there is nothing in that rule to forbid the member from expressly designating them as beneficiaries, as that rule permits the member to pay to the wife, children or other designated payee or payees. There can be no reason why they may not be designated beneficiaries as a class just as children may be, and, if so, how can we say that the Rule of 1895 has in any way affected the policy when we find that the deceased, or a class, not thereby forbidden to be beneficiaries, are named therein as such. The deceased, if he examined his policy after the Rule was passed, may well have been satisfied that it still represented his wishes, as we must take it it formerly did."

THREATEN TO STRIKE

FIVE THOUSAND MINERS WILL GO OUT IF THE OPERATORS FAIL TO KEEP FAITH.

(Special to the Times.)

Marion, Pa., March 19.—Twenty-six delegates, representing nearly 5,000 coal miners in Marion, Butler and Lawrence Counties, met here yesterday, to confer with the operators for the purpose of harmonizing the new conditions called for by the Chicago agreement.

The operators failed to appear, and the meeting passed a resolution that all miners in the three counties should quit work on April 1, and refuse to return until all the operators comply with the requirements of the Chicago agreement.

THE TRENT NAVIGATION

Dam No. 3 was about completed last fall, and dam No. 4 was about two-thirds completed, the high water up to the south of dams prevented their completion. The following work is yet to be done, viz., the completion of dams Nos. 3 and 4, the construction of locks Nos. 2 and 3, and the gates for all the locks, two entrance piers and the abutments for a high level bridge at Lakefield, one guard gate and the raising of the Grand Trunk Railway track near Lakefield. The work is progressing very satisfactorily on this section.

Section No. 2, Peterborough-Lakefield Division.—The contractors on this section are Messrs. Corry and Laverdure. The excavation on this section is fairly well advanced being about half completed. The great part of the excavation yet to be done is in connection with the hydraulic lock and that near the Warsaw and Norwood roads. The works completed are as follows:

"The entrance pier and piers for the Grand Trunk Railway swing bridge (except pivot pier) at Nassau, the piers for the Warsaw and Norwood Road bridges, the Maria Street bridge, the pipe culvert near the Norwood road, the waste weir and embankment near Nassau, about half excavation and about all the rock work. The works yet remaining to be done are the dam and pivot pier for highway bridge at Nassau, an ordinary lift lock at Ashburnham, the concrete in connection with the hydraulic lift lock, three guard gates and about 200,000 cubic yards of earth work. The superstructures for the bridges are not yet included in this contract, but the superstructures for the Maria Street and Warsaw Road bridges have been completed by the Central Bridge Works of Peterborough."

HOW THE WORK IS DIVIDED.

The Peterborough-Lakefield division, extending from Peterborough to Lakefield, a distance of 10 miles, is divided for construction purposes into two sections. Messrs. Corry and Laverdure having a contract for the first 3 1/2 miles out from Peterborough, and Messrs. Brown, Love and Aylmer for the 6 1/2 miles to Lakefield.

Section No. 1.—Brown, Love and Aylmer, contractors.
"These contractors have managed their work very well. Three of the concrete locks are completed, and another is commenced; two of the dams are completed and a third is in progress; the road diversions are made, and about three-quarters of the rock cutting at Lakefield is done. I see no reason why this section should not be completed next season.

The approximate value of work under contract is $380,000 00
Gross amount of progress estimates up to 1st Nov., 1897

Balance

Section No. 2.—Corry and Laverdure, contractors.

"These contractors have made good progress with the work; concrete abutments for a number of highway bridges have been built, and concrete piers and abutment for the Grand Trunk Railway bridge, with approach walls, have been completed. The dam at Warsaw is about half done, and the prism of the canal is pretty nearly completed for over 1 1/2 miles. I see no reason why these contractors should not finish their contract next season.

The approximate value of work under contract is $360,000 00

THE COST.

Bad Blood Is a Good Thing

to be rid of, because bad blood is the breeding place of disfiguring and dangerous diseases. Is your blood bad? It is if you are plagued by pimples or bothered by boils, if your skin is blotched by eruptions or your body eaten by sores and ulcers. You can have good blood, which is pure blood, if you want it. You can be rid of pimples, boils, blotches, sores and ulcers. How? By the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

It is the radical remedy for all diseases originating in the blood. Read the evidence:

GETTING INTO SHAPE

Mr. Starr and the Council Arrange Preliminary Detail of the Railway Scheme

Mr. D. A. Starr met the whole Council in Committee on Saturday night to discuss with them the question of the proposed electric railway to Lakefield and boat service between Lakefield and Chemung. Mayor Davis presided, and the other members present were Councilors J. B. McWilliams, Deane, Best, Hamilton, Robertson, W. H. White, J. M. White, Cobb, Langford, Dwyer, and Hamilton.

The mayor said the sub-committee appointed on Friday evening spent an hour on Saturday afternoon going into details of the proposed arrangement. The situation at the present time was this. Mr. Starr had made a proposal to the Peterborough and Ashburnham Street Railway Company, who, however, had not accepted it, though there was a fair prospect for a settlement being arrived at. All they could do was to prepare a sort of skeleton agreement which could be elaborated afterwards. If the franchise of the present company could be secured, matters would be much simplified.

Coun. Best remarked that what the prospective company required was a 20 years franchise dated from July next, and a $20,000 bond.

The committee proceeded to enter into the proposed details, which will not be made public until finally agreed upon.

Over Production in Cheese

The following resolution was adopted at a special general meeting of the Montreal Butter and Cheese Association held on Friday March 4, 1897:—Whereas the price of finest cheese to-day being lower than it has been at this season for the past twenty years, and market being in a most stagnant state, it would appear that there is an overproduction of this article, and whereas, the consumption of Cheese does not relatively increase with the growth of population in the same ratio as butter; and whereas the butter market to-day in Canada, the United States, England and other countries is in a most healthy position at relatively very much higher prices than cheese; and whereas the make of fodder cheese is at all times hurtful to the trade, its inferior quality rendering the consumption of the article and so tending to depress the market, thus depreciating the value of the finer qualities and heavy make of full grass cheese, therefore, in view of these facts be resolved: That in the wisdom and opinion of this association no hay or fodder cheese should be made this spring, and that farmers should consider well the advisability of increasing the make of butter and limiting the production of cheese.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 22, 1898

A SUCCESSFUL CONCERN

We publish in another column the 25th annual report of the Confederation Life Association. It would appear that this institution is making steady and satisfactory progress in spite of its increasing number of competitors. It is an interesting fact although an amount of insurance was secured slightly in excess of that for 1896, the whole business of the association was conducted at a cost actually less than for that year. Of the 2,164 applications for $3,332,485 of insurance, 2,072 for $3,143,285 were accepted and written up. Adding to this the bonuses, the full amount of new business was $3,108,172. The total business in force at the close of the year was $28,332,006 under 18,915 policies on 16,427 lives. The figures have an eloquent significance, and carry greater weight with thoughtful people than a multiplicity of eulogistic phrases. A somewhat larger amount than usual was disbursed to satisfy death claims—$243,525.75—occurring under 140 policies on 119 lives. The directors explain that this is largely due to the fact that several lives fell in on which there were large insurances carried. Considering the lives at risk and the age of the Company, this speaks well for the care observed by the directors in the admission of only healthy lives. The very large amount paid to policyholders and annuitants during the past year is worthy of attention, while another strong feature is the distribution of $89,994.69 cash profits to the policyholders.

That the institution is in good shape, therefore, is unquestionable, and it will be a long time before those who have a financial interest in it have to fall back upon their security. With the surplus security standing at $1,336,000.74, there is little cause for fear.

COREA'S FUTURE

On the surface, Corea appears to have rid itself of the official support of Russia. A short time ago the Government announced that it would dismiss the Russians in its fiscal and military services. Now it is stated that the Russian Government has instructed its representative in Seoul to inform the Emperor of Corea and his Ministers that if, in their opinion the country no longer needs foreign help, the Russian financial adviser will be recalled. The military officers, however, will temporarily remain at the service of the Russian mission. Thus the official connection of Russia with Corea is about to end for the present, as there can be no doubt as to the wishes of the Korean Government.

This is one chapter in the story of the relations of Corea with its great neighbor. What the commanding influence of that has forced the retirement of Russia is not very plain. Perhaps it is to be assumed that the United pressure of Japan and Great Britain has effected the temporary defeat of the ambitious plans of Russia. At all events, the Englishman in charge of the customs service, whose dismissal was demanded some time since, remains at his post. Another fact in this connection, however, must not be overlooked. It was stated a few days ago that what is called Deer Island has been leased to Russia by Corea. This island commands the treaty port of Fusan, which has the best harbor in Corea and is only a short distance from Japan. If Russia holds and fortifies this island, it will intercept communication between Japan and Corea at Fusan. When it is considered that Russia now has possession of that part of China lying to the west, it is apparent that the coils are being drawn around Corea. The mere withdrawal of official connection with the Korean Government is of trifling consequence compared with the approach of Russia from all sides.

It would seem that the policy of Russia is to move gradually into the Korean and Chinese country. It matters little what influence is in control at Seoul, so long as Russia is drawing the lines more tightly on the Korean borders. In the end Corea must fall, like ripe fruit, into the hands of the slow-advancing conquerors. If anything in Asia appears certain, it is that Russia is steadily aiming to augment its territory along the northeastern seacoast.

Cyclists are not the only persons with wheels nowadays.

Those people who wish to be up-to-date must keep an eye on the time—the Morning Times.

Already an occasional fleet bicyclist is seen bent over on his handle-bars. Possibly the secret is he takes a double pleasure in his position.

Herr Andree, who sailed away in a balloon to look for the North Pole, is still missing. It will be as difficult to find him as to discover the Pole.

Newspaper correspondents are talking through their hats as well as through the cable in their speculations as to Lord Salisbury's successor at the British Foreign Office.

Judging from the first appearance of feminine bicyclists in Peterborough this year, we are going to be treated to some rare sights on wheels when the riding season is really with us.

No one—absolutely no one—supposes a yellow journal cares five cents about the Cubans, the Maine victims, or anyone else. Whatever a yellow journal does, whether it gets up an enterprise of art, or charity, or amusement, is done as an advertisement simply.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier confesses that he might be better employed than in reading the sort of newspapers he peruses every day in the week. As his reading is presumably limited to the Globe and the Montreal Gazette, we are inclined to agree with him, and venture to suggest that it is "time for a change." He would do well to take a turn with the Morning Times.

The bill prohibiting the distribution and sale in Canada of newspapers issued or purporting to be issued on Sundays is as illogical as it is impracticable. Our grandmotherly legislators are evidently not aware that the production of Monday morning newspapers entails more labor on what is called the Sabbath Day than does the issuing of a so-called Sunday newspaper, which latter, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, is despatched to the newsagents on the Saturday.

Sweet Reasoning
On tiptoe, very wide awake,
Drawn for a moment from her play,
Watching grandmother frost a cake,
Wee Mabel stood one day.

A spell of pensive silence passed,
When by a sudden impulse led,
"My papa says 'tis dawning fast,"
With artless pride she said.

Then, pausing as the future glowed
With promise in her childish view:
"An' dyan'ma, when I dit all dwoved Den I tan 'twost cakes, too!"

Grandmother stopped, and with a kiss
Mabel was folded to a breast
Whose longings for her future bliss
Love-moistened eyes expressed.

"Dyan'me," she murmured, nestling Them,
Her sense of fostering love complete,
"I dwees dey's 'twostal on 'ou' hair, Belauss 'ou is so sweet!"

ELECTRICITY AND CROPS

THE CURRENT HELPS THINGS TO GROW WITH GOOD RESULTS.

Freshman Know the Secret—Seeds, Flowers, Grapes, Strawberries and Vegetables Showing Extraordinary Vigor When Electricity is Applied.

It has long been known that the electricity in the atmosphere plays an important part in the stimulation of vegetable growth, but hitherto no practical use has been made of this knowledge.

The results recently obtained by some French scientists, who have been experimenting with the effects of electricity on plants indicate that a most valuable aid to agriculture has been discovered. A plant deprived of atmospheric electricity by covering it with a network of fine steel wires soon withers away and dies; when artificially stimulated by an electric current it blossoms far more vigor than in a normal condition.

With these data to work upon the experimenters moistened seeds with water and then subjected them to the influence of an electric current. The seeds thus treated grew with far more vigor and came to maturity sooner than those not so treated. They even succeeded in making date stones germinate, which is a very unusual thing to happen in France.

Pears, beans and maize grew with astonishing swiftness when treated with the powerful current of a Ruhmkorff coil and the yield was greater than ordinary. Experiments with batteries were not so successful when the current was passed through the earth, because of the difference in the resistance of the soil in various places to the passage of the current. The resulting crop was uneven in character, according as one particular section received more or less of the electric current. With the powerful electrical machines much more satisfactory results were obtained. Strawberries in particular were ripened in a remarkably short time.

Electrical machines are far too expensive, however, for a farmer to use, and though all right in theory they are too costly in practice.

The new invention is called the geomagnetizer, and consists of an ordinary pole forty or fifty feet high, surmounted with a chevron of copper spikes, designed to act as a collector of atmospheric electricity. This collector is insulated from the pole by a porcelain knob, and connects with a copper wire (also insulated from the pole), which transmits the current to a network of wires which are laid under the soil at a depth of about six feet. These wires are made of galvanized iron, and their cost is not large.

By the use of this apparatus the production on a given area has been increased 50 per cent. The grapes from vineyards in which the geomagnetizer is used, are richer in sugar and alcohol than ordinary grapes. Flowers have a stronger perfume, and when stimulated in this manner, the exact chemical action which the current has upon fruits and vegetables cannot be determined. It is only certain that such action takes place. Some hold that it acts by adding the plants to water, while others think that it favors the assimilation of certain mineral salts in the soil.

The experiment can be tried of any lawn or flower bed so long as the pole is away from the house. If too close it acts as a lightning conductor, but without effect on vegetation.

It is estimated that a geomagnetizer sixty feet high will enrich the soil to the same degree as ten times its cost in manure. At the present time a successful farmer has to be something of a chemist, and it now seems as though he will have to be an electrician, too.

A NEW CURE FOR ERYSIPELAS.

Colloidal Liquid With an Extraordinary Name Dr. Marmorek Has Made.

It is reported that a Parisian physician, Marmorek by name, has discovered a new serum for the cure of erysipelas, purpura, fever and bronchial pneumonia. This recently discovered remedy has been given the peculiar and lengthy name of Anti-streptococcic serum. It has been seen at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, and is a thin, colorless liquid, resembling water in almost every detail. No word has come so far as to its success or whether any really definite cures have been made.

As a matter of fact, there is only a very small quantity of it as yet in existence—little more than a tiny vial. Indeed, but this is sufficient to have aroused pretty nearly all Paris—that section of it is least which takes an interest in medical affairs and in the science of curing disease—into making frequent inquiries and regarding the discovery as of great practical importance. Dr. Marmorek says that he is beset on every hand with requests for a small quantity of the serum on the part of both physicians and surgeons, and he has been obliged to shut out the public and the medical fraternity for a time until he has prepared more of the precious liquid.

His reason for so acting is his remembrance of the time of the discovery of the antitoxin sera, when the institute was besieged by anxious crowds demanding the new remedy and offering large sums of money for even a little of it. When the doctors then explained to them that it was impossible to give them what they asked for because there was no supply of it on hand, the crowd returned and upbraided the Pasteur physicians violently, calling them unhuman and brutal. Dr. Marmorek is anxious that such a scene shall not occur in connection with his discovery. In a month and a half Marmorek claims that he will have an ample supply and will meet all demands that may be made upon him.

Deadly Work of the New Bacterium. Dr. Benjamin Baker, in a paper on "War and Engineering," calls attention to the devastation which the small-bore rifle effects in the human body. He says: "The magazine rifle bullet, though no larger in diameter than a lead pencil, does not simply perforate a bone, but the part is always powdered; fragments are frequently scattered out through the wound of exit, which is commonly converted into a gaping orifice, the muscles are pulped, and, in fact, the limb mangled and damaged beyond repair." It may not unreasonably be concluded, therefore, that by supplying soldiers with a weapon which kills or maims for life everyone a bone of whose body is touched by a bullet even at a short distance, and further, by making victims and vanquished suffer equally, and the cost of killing a man to be immeasurably greater than of not killing him, the world will ever be made more peace-loving than it is at present.

BIRTH ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Some of the Various Ways in Which Newspapers Print Them.

Of all the things that appear in the regular and ordinary "makeup" of a newspaper, birth notices are perhaps the most amusing. They find their way into both metropolitan and country newspapers. The latter especially teem with them. The crossroads correspondent often sends such occurrences important items, hence their frequent appearance in the line of the "local." Some papers have particular columns or spaces devoted to birth, marriage and obituary news. Others record the same events under the title "Cradle," "Altar" and "Tomb," while a third class use large words in the headline, "Yells," "Howls" and "Knells."

The following are a few notices clipped at random from papers all over the United States and Canada, say, the Chicago Tribune and the New York Herald. Some are the product of the pen of the more information than is necessary:

26TH ANNUAL REPORT

Steady Progress of the Confederation Life Association

Large Increase in Payment to Policy Holders—Interest Collections in Advance of any Previous Year

The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the Confederation Life Association was held at the Head Office of the company, Yonge, Richmond and Victoria streets, Toronto, on Tuesday, March 15, 1897, at 3 p.m.

There was a fair attendance of shareholders and policyholders.

Mr. W. H. Beatty, Vice-President, was appointed to act as chairman, and Mr. J. K. Macdonald, Managing Director, as Secretary.

After the usual formalities the following report and statements of the affairs of the Association for the year 1897 were presented:

REPORT.

The year 1897, like some of those which preceded it, was one that called for the exercise of much care and prudence, both in regard to obtaining new insurance and in the investment of the funds. It would have been quite within the ability of your directors to have largely increased the volume of new business, but it was deemed the wiser course to continue the conservative policy of the past, and do a safe, though moderate business, at a reasonable cost.

The policyholders and shareholders will note with satisfaction that while an amount of new insurance was secured slightly in excess of that for 1896, it was obtained, and the entire business of the association conducted, at a cost actually less than that for that year.

The total applications received during the year were 2,104 for $3,332,485 of insurance, 2,072 for $3,143,285 were approved and policies written; 85 for $182,200 were declined, and 7 for $7,000, being incomplete, were deferred. Including bonus additions, the new business for the year was $3,168,172. The total business for the close of the year was $28,332,005.00 under 18,915 policies on 16,427 lives.

In the matter of the valuation of the policy and annuity obligations, for all business taken since December 31, 1895, a rate of 3-1-2 per cent. only has been assumed.

Your directors are pleased to be able to report a very fair increase in the returns from property taken over in the City of Toronto, and with the improvement which seems to be very generally anticipated a still higher return is looked for during the present year. They are also very glad to report that the payment of interest on mortgage account has been very much better than for some years past. The actual collections were about 16 per cent. in advance of those for 1896, while the amount due and outstanding at the 31st December last was almost 25 per cent. less than at the corresponding date of 1896. It may also be stated that several house properties have been sold during the year to realize all the company had against them.

The death claims arising in the year aggregated the sum of $243,824. These occurred under 140 policies, on 119 lives. While well within the tabular rate, it is larger than the usual experience of this company, and arises largely from the fact that several lives fell in on which there were large insurances carried, which considerably increased the average. The above, considering the lives at risk and the age of the company, will strongly attest the care exercised by the directors in the admission of only healthy lives.

Attention may be called to the very large amount paid by the Association during the past year to its policyholders and annuitants, and especially to the sum of almost $90,000 CASH PROFITS TO POLICYHOLDERS.

The total payments including $8,001, the amount received for re-insurances, and which is deducted from the death claims in the financial statement, were $511,752.82.

It may also be mentioned that this Association since its organization has paid a total of $1,034,214.74 CASH PROFITS up to the close of last year to its policyholders, an amount equal to 43 per cent of the total death claims during the same time.

The financial statements herewith submitted exhibit the transactions of the Association and its condition on the 31st December last.

The auditors have given strict attention to their duties, making their investigations from month to month, and their report will be found appended to the financial statements.

The directors are also pleased to report that the field and office staffs continue to discharge their duties with efficiency and diligence.

All the directors retire, but are eligible for re-election.

W. P. HOWLAND, President.
J. K. MACDONALD, Managing Director.

Several of the policyholders and stockholders present referred in complimentary terms to the success which had attended the operations of the Association, and the report was unanimously adopted.

Resolutions of thanks, which were suitably responded to, were also passed to the Directors, officers, Auditors, Medical Examiners, Field and Office Staffs, for their faithful services during the year.

The retiring directors were re-elected, viz., Hon. Sir W. P. Howland, Edward Hooper, Esq., W. H. Beatty, Esq., Hon. Jas. Young, S. Nordheimer, Esq., W. H. Gibbs, Esq., A. READ WHAT PHYSICIANS SAY OF POND'S EXTRACT

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 20, 1894. I have used "Pond's Extract" for many years and always insist upon my patients getting "Pond's," not the ordinary Extract, which is often a very poor article. W. K. BROWN, M. D.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 9, 1895. I use Pond's Extract a great deal in my practice. I think it very valuable in all venous enlargements. J. L. BRADFORD, M. D.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., Nov. 27, 1894. I have been using Pond's Extract in my practice for twenty years. I frequently have the experience you mention of druggists insisting they can put up as good as yours. I don't believe it. I use Pond's Extract a great deal as an antiseptic in combination with glycerine and carbolic acid. I think it far superior to any antiseptic known. F. G. FLOURNOY, M. D.

Letters patent have been issued incorporating the Calvert Brewing and Malting Company, of Ashburnham. The capital stock of the company is $25,000, divided into 5,000 shares of $5 each. Mr. H. Calvert is President of the new company.

The Tankard Club
We notice by the Lindsay Post that the Rev. J. W. Macmillan preached a special sermon to the curiers of that town on Sunday last. Does this account for the phenomenal success of the Lindsay boys in capturing the Tankard on two occasions? If so, it might be well for Peterborough to go and do likewise.

Thankfully Acknowledged
The Board of Managers of the Children's Aid Society wish to publicly express their great appreciation of the following kind gifts: Mr. F. R. Akerman, $5; Mrs. O'Sullivan, $1; Mrs. John Matheson, quilt; Mr. Armstrong, clothing. In addition to former generous contributions Mrs. Walsh has handed to the treasurer $2, and Miss M. Dickson an additional $1.

Metereological Reflections
Twenty years ago the weather in March was about the same as at present. In April the trees bloomed and vegetation was very much advanced. Later in the season severe frosts were experienced, and the fruit crop was almost totally destroyed. Let us hope that history will not repeat itself in this case.

Hard on Trade
These wet, disagreeable March Saturdays are a severe drawback to trade, and the local merchants are feeling the result of the protraction in some cases quite extensively. Farmers will not come in when it is wet. On wet days, too, shoppers are more or less gloomy, and but down in price everything they buy.

The Ice Disappeared
Commodore Calvert stated yesterday to the Times that a phenomenal occurrence took place on Sunday, the ice on the Little Lake having entirely disappeared, and none of it gone down the river. Usually the ice floats down the river to Masses, but this year there was hardly a particle but what melted in the lake, and that, too, all in one day.

Held Up
A "hold-up" occurred between Newcastle and Newtonville on Saturday evening last, and the consequence is that a Newcastle butcher is out to the extent of $38 bird cash. The highwaymen, three in number, are supposed to be tramps, and to show that they meant business blazed at the victim with a revolver, and so close that the bullet went through the rim of his hat, which had the desired effect—Bowmanville News.

Ladies in on Hand at Oriental Hotel on Wednesday, March 23, to see Prof. Dorendew's latest designs and styles in Hair Goods. He will have a large stock of Wigs, Bangs, Wavey Fronts, Switches, etc. The judicious adjustment of one or other of these styles brings beauty and youthful appearance to the face and gives the head a superior and intellectual shape. "upstream" of 1894 and go on to do not miss this chance.

Bicycle Notes
—Already a number of wheels are seen on our streets—or sidewalks. Several young ladies indulged in a spin yesterday.

An American traveller at the Snowden House yesterday said that chainless wheels are becoming very popular, notwithstanding the high price. He predicts that next year the chain-driven wheel will be a back number.

Grand Millinery Opening
Miss Delaney announces in another column her annual spring millinery opening, commencing to-morrow and continuing Thursday and Friday. The numerous patrons of this establishment will find the display of spring millinery on view the largest and most fashionable in town. It comprises all that is stylish and select in Paris and New York and will be found well worthy of inspection. Visitors will be made cordially welcome.

Fire Sale at Macca's
The recent fire at E. F. Mason & Co.'s has had the effect of slightly damaging by smoke the immense stock of groceries and provisions carried by this firm and in order to facilitate renovation and make room for new goods, a clearing sale has been inaugurated and is now in full swing. Everything must go, and at almost your own price. Don't procrastinate! Call to-day!

Piles! Piles! Itching Piles
Symptoms—Moisture intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate and become very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Lyman Bros. & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents.

A Legend of the Islands
The Japanese, who claim to have first discovered or utilized the peach, have a quaint legend as to the fruit. A pious old couple, pestered with years and poverty, subsisted by begging. One day on the highway the old woman found the beautiful ripe fruit. Although almost famished, she did not selfishly eat the luscious peach alone, but took it home to divide with her husband. As the knife cut into it the fruit opened, and an infant sprang forth, who told the astonished beggars that he was the god Shinto and had accidentally fallen from the orchard of the Japanese heaven while at play with some other gods and goddesses. For extracting him from the peach Shinto gave the Japs its seed to plant and told them its product would make them wealthy. This is the origin of the peach, according to the Japs and my Chicago friend, Blupperman, who told me this story—Denver Field and Farm.

CLEARING SALE

In order to facilitate the progress of proposed alterations and improvements in our premises we have decided to clear out the whole of our present large and well assorted stock of Boots & shoes, Rubbers, etc., at cost and under for the next thirty days. Sale commences to-day. Everything must go and within the stated time, 30 days. J. T. Simpson, 304 Geo. Street.

Shipment of the Dead
The laws regarding the shipment of dead bodies which were passed by the Ontario Legislature some time ago are not being well observed, throughout the province. It has been reported to the Registrar-General's Department that the body of a victim of diphtheria had been shipped on the Kingston & Pembroke and the Grand Trunk Railways, without proper precautions being taken. The Deputy Registrar-General has notified the companies of the complaint.

Its great healing and curative powers are possessed by no other remedy. Ask your druggist for Swayne's Ointment. Lyman Bros. & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents. Avoid substitutes.

New Maple Syrup. "Spot Cash."

Ready for War
The latest militia general orders provide for officers commanding units of the permanent corps taking steps to insure a supply of small arms, ammunition being at all times in possession of the permanent and city corps, and of rural corps, whose arms are kept at regimental headquarters. The ammunition must at all times be retained in the store or armory of the corps, as a reserve for service in aid of the civil power or for active service. The allowance is 100 rounds per rifle or carbine for permanent and city corps and fifty rounds per rifle or carbine for rural corps.

Joined Together in Matrimony
Miss Maggie Lundy, of Ashburnham, daughter of the late Mr. Wm. Lundy, was married in Toronto yesterday afternoon to Mr. Thomas Hewson, of Hamilton, and a former resident of Peterborough. The wedding took place at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. Baldwin, Parkdale. At the conclusion of the service Mr. and Mrs. Hewson left for a western trip, and on their return will take up their residence in Hamilton. Both the bride and groom were great favorites of the wedding party. Mr. J. J. Lundy and Miss Pearl Lundy were present at the wedding.

Canadian on the Maine
Commander Knowlton, of the G.A.R., now living in Toronto, has received the following letter from the Bureau of Navigation, U.S. Department, Washington: "Dear Sir:—There were twelve Canadians on board the cruiser Maine at the time of her destruction—Barley Fountain, boatswain's mate, first class, and George Zanbarro, apprentice, first class, both of the U.S. Navy. The boatswain's mate was seriously injured, and the apprentice, suffering from slight injuries, was saved and are now at Key West. Signed, J. H. Mearns, Commander, U.S. Navy."

Our New Postage Stamp
The new Canadian postage stamp possesses a peculiarity that is somewhat neat and remarkable. The Queen's head which forms the design on the face of the stamp, becomes the head of a typical Arab or Oriental chief, if turned upside down. It also possesses another peculiarity. If you do not look closely before affixing it to a letter you will have it upside down nine times out of ten. The design is too obscure. At a distance of three feet it looks like the two-cent United States stamp, being identical in color and size. This covers the contract for the printing to a Yankee firm.

Meant for Good, as Well as Ladies
The first officer for riding a wheel on sidewalks of this town was a gentleman who possibly considered the riding of the Chief of Police published in the Times last week as being restricted in its application to lady cyclists. Magistrate Dumble had an interview at the Court yesterday morning with Charles G. Mallett, an assistant superintendent of the Canadian General Electric Company, and for a pecuniary consideration of a couple of dollars gave him to understand that gentlemen cyclists have equal responsibilities as well as equal rights with feminine wheelers. Constable Stevens was the officer who proved the case. The police are determined to protect pedestrians.

Very Remarkable
A remarkable coincidence has just happened public. It appears that two persons of the name of Hamilton township and the other of Bobcaygeon township at about the same time, and telegrams announcing each death almost crossed on the wire. The facts are briefly as follows: Last Tuesday Peter Sidney Hamilton, resident of the township of Hamilton, died, and his son went to Cobourg to telegraph to deceased's brother, William, who lived at Bobcaygeon, announcing the sad news. He handed the message to the telegraph operator, who immediately handed him back one just received from Bobcaygeon, announcing William's death.

Twenty Widows
The little fishing steamer New England, which put into San Francisco for a supply of coal and provisions sufficient to carry her to Vancouver. She has come from Boston by way of the Straits of Magellan, and has travelled 14,770 miles without mishap. She carries a crew of eighteen, all told, and is commanded by Captain Smith. The captain says he passed the steamer City of Columbia. She has on board the 20 New England widows and 6 male passengers. The widows are bound for Alaska, where it is their intention to open shops for the sale of groceries, dry goods, hardware, etc. Sixty widows were to have sailed in the steamer, but all but 20 lost courage at the last moment.

The House and Lot, property of Wm. Leach, 502 Hunter Street, will be offered for sale March the twenty-second, by auction. Intending purchasers may inspect the house and premises the day before, from two until four o'clock. The store between Mr. Stratton's and W. Leach & Sons' fur store will also be offered for sale at the same time.

A New Rifle
Valerian Solodovnikov, of St. Petersburg, Russia, has recently patented in Canada a double lock breech-loading rifle. The barrel is pivoted in the same manner as an ordinary breech-loading rifle, and the locks are so arranged that the return of the barrel to its closed position after the breech has been opened automatically locks both of the locking devices, so that in the event of accident to one of the locks the other will securely hold the barrel in its closed position, and the rifle can be used with safety. The patents for this rifle were obtained through Mr. O. H. Riches, of the Canada Life Building, Toronto, who has agencies in all the principal cities of the world, and whose advertisement appears elsewhere.

A Horseman's Journal
Mr. Wm. Sherman returned yesterday from a trip through Squaw river district in Harvey, his business being to inspect telegraph poles taken out by farmers and jobbers during the winter. Owing to the very high water the trip was not alone unpleasant but hazardous as on one occasion he was compelled to drive over a floating corduroy causeway, which parted, allowing the horse to drop into the middle of a swollen creek. Mr. Sherman saved himself by leaping from the buggy to a floating section of this roadway, and after drifting down the swirling waters a distance of about thirty yards the raft grounded and he gained the shore, wet but thankful. In the meantime the horse had somehow managed to ford the stream, and the remainder of the trip to Robyavon was covered at a fast pace—Lindsay Post.

I. O. O. F. HAVE A GOOD TIME

Last Night's Smoking Concert was a Big Success
The members of the Otomabee Lodge, No. 13, I.O.O.F., gave a complimentary "smoker" last night in the Oddfellows' Hall, corner of George and Hunter Streets, when a company numbering upwards of 150 spent a convivial time together. Vocal and instrumental music, cards, checkers and the friendly pipe and cigar were the features of a delightful social gathering. The Oddfellows of Peterborough are some four or five hundred strong, which fact speaks well for the popularity and excellence of the Order. Accompanied by the presence of Bro. Wm. Quinn, P. M., chairman; J. M. Gemmell, secretary; D. G. Armstrong, P. G.; J. A. McGill, P. G.; W. D. Jewett, V. G., and W. Bletcher were responsible for the admirable organization of last night's affair. Others among the company were Bros. Dr. Rose, M. G. F. Wright, R. S. J. A. Tully, F. S.; W. H. McNeill, treasurer; Dr. R. W. Bell, P. G. M.; Mr. J. R. Stratton, M. P. P.; and Mr. J. W. Garvin. The musical part of the programme was ably sustained by Mr. James Hamilton, Mr. Geo. H. Adam, banjo; Mr. Dan Gordon, vocal; Mr. W. Moncrief, vocal; and Mr. Geo. Schneider, piano.

Railway and River Notes

The Lakeland boats are being overhauled previous to the opening of navigation.

Mr. Jimmy Spellman will again cater to the public at Idylwyld this season.

The steamer Majestic (see Mary Ellen) of Young's Point, is being thoroughly repaired.

The railway between Cobourg and Harwood would afford a good opening for an electric road.

It is reported that the Sunbeam will go on the route between Lindsay and Cobocook this season.

LeBrun & Pelcher are talking about giving a Jubilee Point this season from Commodore Calcutt.

C.P.R. Agent Ramford spent yesterday in glad tidings the hearts of many of the business men. It was monthly pay day, and many accounts around town were liquidated.

Commodore Calcutt is preparing "ways" on which to pull the City of Peterborough out of the water for repairs. The Ashburnham dock yard will be a busy place this spring, as all the steamers will be undergoing repairs there.

Traveling was never cheaper in Canada than it is to-day and those who intend taking a trip should do so at once before the railways come to an agreement. It is probable that a railway commission will be appointed by parliament for the purpose of regulating rates, deciding disputes and enforcing the law. Rate wars will then be a thing of the past.

WAR TALK ONCE MORE

How Matters Stand Between Spain and the U. S.

WAR FEELING PROMOTED

Jingoism at Washington Determined to Bring on Trouble

Both Sides Stated to be Animated by War-Like Feelings. What the Little Man Will do No Arbitration—Spain is Alive—Rebels Stubborn

With the approach of the presentation of the report of the Board of Enquiry to President McKinley, there comes a natural crisis, but instead of remaining calm and checking the war feeling, it is evident that the war sentiment is being industriously promoted. Not only are the yellow papers busy in this way, but Press Association despatches are tinged with the prospects of trouble. It is quite evident that war, once war only, will satisfy the Jingo at Washington, and they are losing no opportunity to further their desires. The wisdom which would teach them to wait the publication of the report is lacking, and every despatch to-day bears the jingo earmarks. It is war, no matter how slight the cause, how small the justification, how great the cost, that they want.

(Special to the Times.)

WASHINGTON, March 22.—In official circles it is not doubted that a clash with Spain is imminent. Sufficient is known of what the report of the court of inquiry will be to lead to the opinion that there will be no attempt to definitely fix the blame for the loss of the Maine on the Spanish side.

It is limited quite generally today to a demand for reparation for the loss of the Maine, will be made upon Spain because the vessel was destroyed in the harbor of a supposed friendly nation in time of peace.

It is even said that information to this effect has already been conveyed to the Spanish Minister. If the United States is firm in its demand it is hard to see how a conflict can be avoided, for the preservation of the Spanish throne itself depends upon the attitude of the Spanish Minister.

The Spaniards are anxious to fight. They believe they can easily defeat the "American" forces. In itself Cuba represents nothing to them. The loss of the Island would be a severe blow only to their national pride. They would rather fight than be humiliated further. They will not give up Cuba without a struggle. It is declared that if the United States determines upon reparation there will certainly be war.

There is no disguising the fact that the situation today is very critical. The Senate and the House of Representatives are in a warlike mood.

Congress will certainly stand by McKinley. The President's attitude has the approval of leaders in both the Senate and the House. The demand for reparation for the loss of the Maine will be made quickly. No time will be given to Spain to consult the European powers.

There will be no international arbitration. The Government will not consider such a step. The question of peace is with Spain. There will be war only if she resists the firm demands of the United States. After the reply shall have been received concerning the loss of the Maine, the President and Congress, acting together will consider other phases of the Cuban situation.

Speaker Reid has admitted in private conversation that the Cuban question in the House has been taken out of his hands.

In the Senate, the effect of Proctor's speech is most apparent on the adherents of peace. Many of them, including Senator Hale, frankly admit the already declaring for intervention to save Cuba.

When Senator Thurston addresses the Upper House on Thursday next regarding the Cuban question, there is every reason to believe that the day will be a memorable one.

SPAIN IS ALIVE

WATCHING UNCLE SAM'S PREPARATIONS—PROGRESS OF THE TORPEDO FLEET.

MADRID, March 22.—The papers here publish full reports of the movements of the United States warships and of the defensive preparations being made by the Government of the United States. It is reported that the Spanish warship selected to convoy the torpedo flotilla has sailed from Cartagena for the Canary Islands. It appears that the delay in the voyage of the torpedo boats is due to the fact that the Ariete, one of the Spanish torpedo boats, sustained some slight damage while on her way from Cadix to the Canaries.

The Spanish newspapers advocate further strengthening of the naval squadron in Cuba, so as not to be caught at a disadvantage in the event of war.

REBELS STUBBORN

THEY DECLINE TO AGREE TO THE TERMS OF AUTONOMY OFFERED.

HAVANA, March 22.—It is now known positively that the negotiations between Gen. Pando, Delegates Ramirez and Chavez, and Gen. Calisto Garcia and other prominent insurgents, in which the radical autonomists made what are said to be offers of made what are said to be offers of practical independence, have proved an absolute failure. No particulars have yet been received at the Palace here, as to the place or particulars of the meeting, but the failure of the negotiations is known since hostilities, which were suspended in order to allow of the negotiations, have been resumed.

SPANISH VIEWS

THE UNITED STATES' COURSE IS ONCE MORE COMPLAINED OF.

The Imperial (Independent) expresses the opinion that the action of the United States has completely checked the advantages which Spain might have derived from granting autonomy to Cuba, and alleges that the United States has "practically strangled autonomy at its birth."

The Imperial also thinks Spain failed diplomatically in not having obtained the removal of Consul-General Lee, "nor the withdrawal of the ship from Cuba," and expresses fear that, "although military action will be keener than ever," it will not suffice to pacify Cuba, "owing to circumstances created by the United States."

The Correo (Catalist) does not expect help from Europe, but hopes the Latins of America will support Spain.

THE BOARD FINISHES

REPORT GIVEN TO ADMIRAL SICARD, BUT HAS TO BE ALTERED.

KEY WEST, Fla., March 22.—The United States Court of Inquiry into the loss of the battleship Maine has at last finished its work, and has submitted its report to Rear Admiral Sicard. He has pointed out some alterations which he considers necessary, and the report may possibly be taken to Washington today.

BETRAYAL OF TRUST

Used Official Information to Their Own Profit

Made Large Sums of Money as Government Officer and a Special Employee Under Suspicion

(Special to the Times.)

OTTAWA, March 22.—There is a large sized scandal, in which a prominent officer of the Government is said to be concerned, about ready to be exploded in the Fisheries branch of the Marine and Fisheries Department. A Montreal gentleman is reported to have been working on the case for many weeks past, and he has now got everything in such shape as to lay the whole matter before the Minister, Sir Louis Davies.

If the story of the Montreal man turns out correct, it will be shown that the case for the permanent officer of the Government and a gentleman temporarily employed to make certain investigations, took advantage of the private information which was being supplied to the department to put a few thousand dollars in their own pockets.

The charge is so serious a one to permit of even hinting at the persons thus accused by the Montreal gentleman, who, it is said, had something official to do with the matter, and, therefore, ought to be not otherwise prejudiced, to be in a position to know whereof he speaks. But the whole matter will be ventilated one of these days in Parliament, and until then the names are suppressed.

MR. BLAIR'S BATTLE

FREE TRADERS ELLIS AND HIS COLLEAGUE OPPOSE DESIRES OF THE PARTY.

(Special to the Times.)

ST. JOHN, N.B., March 22.—The breach between the Blair and the Ellis-Tucker wing of the Liberal party in this district has been widened.

At the Liberal meeting last night the Executive report stated that Mr. Ellis and Tucker had worded a direct reply to the association's demand that the Executive be consulted in the matter of appointments and patronage.

A large number are now in favor of asking the two members to resign unless these gentlemen mend their ways by Mr. Blair.

The majority of the association are backed by Mr. Blair.

CHEERS FOR G. O. M.

HE WALKS FIRMLY BUT IS PALE—HIS LAST JOURNEY TO HIS OWN HOME.

(Special to the Times.)

BURNEMOUTH, March 22.—Mr. Gladstone started for Hawarden today in a royal saloon carriage. He walked firmly from his carriage to the train, but was pale.

The old statesman was greeted with frequent cries of "God bless you, sir."

"God's richest blessing rest upon you." Upon entering the train Mr. Gladstone turned and said, in a clear voice: "God bless you all, and this place, and the land you love."

The distinguished traveler was loudly cheered as the train departed.

TRAFFIC TO THE GOLDFIELDS

Gold Seekers Leave the Dyea and the Skagway Lines—Return to Wrangell to go by the All-Canadian Route to the Klondike—Report of H. B. Carter, the Canadian Pack's Special Agent

(Special to the Times.)

Vancouver, B. C., March 22.—Klondike all statements that are being made to the contrary by Seattle journals, the all-Canadian route by way of the Stickine River to the Klondike is the best, after all.

The Canadian Pacific sent up north its Yukon agent, Mr. H. B. Carter, formerly of Toronto, to specially look into the matter of the routes, and a cautious question. Mr. Carter went in a day on horseback, returned to Skagway the following day, and went on to Dyea and Sheep Camp. Then he came back to Vancouver via Wrangell.

He says this trouble about the duties on Canadian outfits has been fixed all right. Mr. Ivey, collector of customs for Alaska, has just returned to Skagway from Washington, and the Treasury instructions of February 2nd are now being given effect to. Under them those holding Canadian outfits pay the "American" duty at Skagway, for which they are given a receipt. This receipt they hand over to the Canadian customs officer at the summit, who refunds the amount paid at Skagway. The same thing applies to Dyea. This means, of course, that Canadians and "Americans" who buy outfits in Canada get their goods into Yukon duty free, while those who buy their outfits in Seattle or any "American" town must pay the ordinary 30 per cent. duty to the Government.

Mr. Carter states that Inspector Strickland was well established on the summit. The Canadian flag is flying right on the summit, and there were 22 members of the Mounted Police there to help the Klondikers and keep order. As to the line, the all-Canadian route, that is the conclusion one is forced to come to after a chat with Mr. Carter.

Major Walsh is still at Lake Bennett. Over 5,000 people are at Wrangell. Mr. Carter states that the much advertised wagon road at Skagway is a myth while the electric tramway is not in operation at Dyea yet, nor is it likely to be for some time.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 23, 1898

SPAIN AND THE STATES

While it is quite possible that America's strained relations with Spain, and the complications certain to come from the loss of her great war vessel in Havana waters and in the final solution of the Cuban problem, may result in war, it is now not at all probable that any dispute will arise between the two nations that cannot be settled without a resort to arms. Two weeks ago it seemed impossible to prevent war because of the strained condition of the Spanish people who impelled that government to seriously endanger the peace of the two nations, but to-day everything presents a more pacific aspect and we are not likely to have war between Spain and the United States. The most important peace-maker in this disturbance has been the absolute unanimity with which the United States government and people came to the front to sustain the honor and dignity of the nation and to accept war if forced upon them. The unanimous vote of $50,000,000 to be expended by the President in his discretion for the common defense, was a knock-out argument in favor of peace, and it seems to have done more to sober and conserve Spain and the Spanish people than all the arguments of diplomacy or threats of war could have effected. War was made next to impossible by deciding to be fully prepared for it and heroically ready to accept it unhesitatingly. The lesson of the unanimity and unanimity of the American government in preparing for the common defense has been studied and appreciated far beyond the confines of Spain. All the nations of Europe have noted it and been profoundly impressed by it. They do not want war any more than the Yankees do, and they are in a position to restrain Spain from forcing needless war upon them. They do not wish the peace of Europe broken, not knowing where the sweep of war might end, and they are in a position to withhold credit from Spain, without which she could not venture upon war.

We shall have disturbances and possibly convulsions now and then on the war issue before peaceful relations with Spain shall be entirely and definitely settled. The yellow kid journals must have their fling, and the speculative gamblers in values will be ever ready to profit by the alarming sensations of the yellow kid's and rob-holders of securities, creating panics but every person who has substantial securities should let the convulsions come and go and wait for the peaceful conditions which are certain to come sooner or later, and soon at the latest, to maintain the intrinsic value of every form of property. To-day everything looks like peace, and while it is possible that war may be precipitated by some unforeseen complication, it is entirely reasonable to say that war with Spain is now improbable.

Since we penned the above, the situation has appeared more alarming, judged by the despatches to hand last night. But notwithstanding these Washington despatches, which bear the impress of yellow journalism, we are still of opinion that the chances are in favor of a peaceful ending to the present crisis.

REGRETS

While one can but admire the pluck and ambition which induce so many of our young men, inspired by the reports that come from the Klondike, as to the fabulous wealth that there lies stored, inviting nerve and sinew to wrest it from its original state, we can but view their departure with feelings of sincere regret. This county and this province lose greatly by such departures. And this feeling of regret is mixed with one of fear lest many of them who go in quest of gold and sudden fortune, may fall by the way or find disappointment awaiting them; find themselves looking back with regret to the happy homes of, at least, plenty, they had left behind. We notice that it is estimated that every dollar in gold taken from the Klondike field costs, on the average, three dollars; this without considering the toil and hardship and privation to which the rank and file of miners will be subject. It is figured that $50,000,000 will go into the Klondike this season.

There is one satisfactory feature in the case; our young men go not to give their labor and intelligence to advantage a foreign country, but go from one part of Canada to another, carrying with them Canadian aspirations and Canadian loyalty. Good luck to the young men; may they speedily return, wealthier in means as they will be vastly wealthier in experience, to give their native province the benefit of both.

While the feminine world is thinking of the Easter bonnet, Cuba will be satisfied with a liberty cap.

There is every reason to think that the whole cloth from which yellow journal lies are made is woven from yarns.

Lots of those inventing war scares wouldn't make good soldiers in the field. They'd let their imaginations run away with them.

It's all right for the people to talk of war between England and Russia, but the bone of contention war dogs quarrel over is not the jaw-bone.

It would not be surprising that if Spain were to run up against the American flag she would see lots of stars and perhaps receive a few stripes.

It is safe to predict that there will be no re-count in either East or West Peterborough. Incidents of the fight, however, are still being recounted.

The phonographic voice which informs you that the "wire is busy—please ring off" must be Satan's very own, judging by the amount of swearing this advice produces.

It is a matter of history that Spain treated Columbus pretty badly. However, the worry that the great voyager has caused it by discovering America has more than balanced accounts.

No one should be blamed for overlooking the fact that the Laurier Government holds a mandate from the people, the Government at present having been elected since its institution as if it held a brief for monopolies and railway sharks.

A London despatch says the system of wireless telegraphy has been given up. The correspondent evidently did not know how successfully wireless telegraphy is being used by the American scare journals to get their war despatches.

The periodicity of Dr. Tanner's outbreaks in the House of Commons invites study. Those who have lived in England are familiar with a different explanation but to Canadians it looks as if the tides of the member from Mil-Cork were governed by the changes of the moon.

The United States have actually purchased two battleships in England. The first one was taken over yesterday at Gravesend, near London, and the Stars and Stripes hauled up in place of the Brazilian flag. Our friend over the border can now be certain of having a couple of battleships that will float.

Glorification of the "independence" of Major Samuel Hughes, M. P., by the Liberal press of Ontario is the fruit either of stupidity or of hypocrisy. The three Grit members who voted against the Government Yukon Bill receive no credit for their manly independence. In the case of "Major Sam," the much-lauded independence was prompted by personal friendship for an interested party, while the Liberal trio had nothing to gain and everything to lose, politically, by their action.

A hard-headed, unimaginative, matter-of-fact young English vicar has thrust a new thorn in the pathway of Miss Marie Corelli. Some time ago one Norman, son of Combe Martin and model for several characters in literature, including Reuben Dale, died and Miss Corelli at once signified her intention of raising a monument to his memory. She wrote to the vicar that the monument must be only a simple cross, bearing the name Reuben Dale, together with a note explaining that Reuben was the hero immortalized in "The Mighty Atom." The vicar promptly replied that in consigning the sexton to earth he buried a man, not a myth; moreover, his churchyard is not available for gratuitous advertisements.

ELECTRICITY AND CROPS

THE CURRENT HELPS THINGS TO GROW WITH GOOD RESULTS.

Frenchmen know the secret—Seeds, Flowers, Grapes, Strawberries and Vegetables Showing Extraordinary Signs When Electricity is Applied.

It has long been known that the electricity in the atmosphere plays an important part in the stimulation of vegetable growth, but hitherto no practical use has been made of this knowledge.

The results recently obtained by some French scientists, who have been experimenting with the effects of electricity on plants indicate that a most valuable aid to agriculture has been discovered. A plant deprived of atmospheric electricity by covering it with a network of fine steel wires soon withers away and dies; when artificially stimulated by an electric current it blossoms with far more vigor than in a normal condition.

With these data to work upon, the experimenters moistened seeds with water and then subjected them to the influence of an electric current. The seeds thus treated grew with far more vigor and came to maturity sooner than those not so treated. They even succeeded in making date stones germinate, which is a very unusual thing to happen in France.

Peas, beans and maize grew with astonishing swiftness when treated with the powerful current of a Ruhmkorff coil and the yield was greater than ordinary. Experiments with batteries were not so successful when the current was passed through the earth, because of the difference in the resistance of the soil in various places to the passage of the current. The resulting crop was uneven in character, according as one particular section received more or less of the electric current.

With the powerful electrical machines much more satisfactory results were obtained. Strawberries in particular were ripened in a remarkably short time.

Electrical machines are far too expensive, however, for a farmer to use, and though all right in theory they are too costly in practice.

The new invention is called the geomagnetifere, and consists of an ordinary pole forty or fifty feet high, surmounted with a chevron of fine copper spikes, designed to act as a collector of atmospheric electricity. This collector is insulated from the pole by a porcelain knob, and connects with a copper wire (also insulated from the pole), which transmits the current to a network of wires which are laid under the soil at a depth of about six feet. These wires are made of galvanized iron, and their cost is not large.

By the use of this apparatus the production on a given area has been increased 50 per cent. The grapes from vineyards in which the geomagnetifere is used are richer in sugar and alcohol than ordinary grapes. Flowers have a stronger perfume also when stimulated in this manner.

The exact chemical action which the current has upon fruits and vegetables cannot be determined. It is only certain that each action takes place. Some hold that it acts by aiding the plants to assimilate the acids of the atmosphere, while others think that it favors the assimilation of certain mineral salts in the soil.

The experiment can be tried on any lawn or flower bed so long as the pole is away from the house. If too close it acts as a lightning conductor, but without giving any protection.

It is estimated that a geomagnetifere sixty feet high will enrich the soil to the same degree as ten times its cost in manure. At the present time a successful farmer has to be something of a chemist, and it now seems as though he will have to be an electrician, too.

A NEW CURE FOR ERYSIPELAS.

Colorless Liquid With an Extraordinary Name Dr. Marmorek Has Made.

It is reported that a Parisian physician, Marmorek by name, has discovered a new serum for the cure of erysipelas, pericarditis and bronchial pneumonia. This recently discovered remedy has been given the peculiar and lengthy name of Anti-erysiplococcus. It has been seen at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, and is a thin, colorless liquid, resembling water in almost every detail. No word has come so far as to its success or whether any really definite cures have been made.

As a matter of fact, there is only a very small quantity of it as yet in existence—little more than a tiny vialful, indeed, but this is sufficient to have aroused pretty nearly all Paris—that section of it at least which takes an interest in medical affairs and in the science of curing diseases—into making frequent inquiries and regarding the discovery as of great practical importance. Dr. Marmorek says that he is best on every hand with requests for a small quantity of the serum on the part of both physicians and sufferers, and he has been obliged to shut out the public and the medical fraternity for a time until he has prepared more of the precious liquid.

His reason for so acting is his remembrance of the time of the discovery of the antitoxine cure, when the Institute was besieged by doctors craving the new remedy and offering large sums of money for even a little of it. When the doctors then explained to them that it was impossible to give them what they asked for because there was no supply of it on hand, the crowd returned and upbraided the Pasteur physicians violently, calling them unhuman and brutes. Dr. Marmorek is anxious that such a scene shall not occur in connection with his discovery. In a month and a half Marmorek claims that he will have an ample supply and will meet all demands that may be made upon him.

Deadly Work of the New Bullet, Sir Benjamin Baker, in a paper on "War and Engineering," calls attention to the devastation which the small-bore rifle effects in the human body. He says: "The magazine rifle bullet, though no larger in diameter than a lead pencil, does not simply perforate a bone, but the part is always pounded; fragments are frequently carried out through the wound of exit, which is commonly converted into a gaping orifice, the muscles are pulsed, and, in fact, the limb mangled and damaged beyond repair." It may not unreasonably be contended, therefore, that by supplying soldiers with a weapon which kills or maims for life everyone a bone of whose body is touched by a bullet even at a mile's distance, and further, by making victors and vanquished suffer equally, and the cost of killing a man to be incomparably greater than of old, engineering science has done more to make war unpopular than all the army talks of the world will ever be able to make, however much they may endeavor to distract attention.

BIRTH ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Some of the Various Ways in Which Newspapers Print Them.

Of all the things that appear in the regular and ordinary "makeup" of a newspaper, birth notices are perhaps the most amusing. They find their way into both metropolitan and country newspapers, and latterly especially seem to flourish. The crossroads correspondents, such as the cures important items, hence their frequent appearance in the Blue Hill Epistle. Some papers have particular columns or spaces devoted to birth, marriage and obituary news. Others record the same events under the title "Cradle," "Altar" and "Tomb," while a third class use three words in the headline, "Yells," "Bells" and "Knells."

The following are a few notices clipped at random from papers all over the United States and Canada, says The Chicago Tribune Herald. Some, to the point, while others convey more information than is necessary:

A. STARTLING PREDICTION

March to be the Most Momentous Month in the World's History

Astronomer Dimbleby on the End of the World: Next Week May Open a New Era for the Jews: Second Coming of the Lord said to be Near

Many Christian people in Peterborough are considerably agitated just now over a pamphlet written by Prof. J. B. Dimbleby, of London, Eng., and many copies of which have been sold here.

According to Prof. Dimbleby, the present month will be the most momentous in the history of the world as in it will be commenced the fulfilment of the last of the great biblical prophecies and the events that are to precede the final winding up of the affairs of the present dispensation according to the teaching of the bible, and the ushering in the millennial period.

Prof. Dimbleby, it may be explained, is a well known English exponent of Bible prophecies, and an astronomer of some note. He is premier chronologist to the British Chronological and Astronomical Association, and first calculator of eclipses and transits. He is also a prize essayist on "Universal Time." The pamphlet referred to in the introductory paragraph, and which is being widely read here now, was first issued about 15 years ago, and is in its 9th edition.

An Explanation.
Before proceeding to give a resume of Prof. Dimbleby's claims, it may be explained that the Christian church-to-day is divided between those who believe in what is called the "second coming of the Lord" and those who do not; the latter are in the majority. Those who believe in the "second coming" say the Bible teaches that some time before the final winding up of the affairs of the world, Christ, as he promised his apostles will come in midair with the sound of the trumpet, and take his followers to be with himself. This great event will, they say the Bible teaches, be followed by a period in which the earth will pass through a terrible season, 3 1/2 years of tribulation, such as man never experienced; the Jews will be restored to God's favor, and Jerusalem become the political centre of the earth. After a period of about 30 years Christ will come in majesty and the final judgment of all men will take place. Those who do not believe in the second coming say they cannot find a warrant for preaching more than the coming of Christ to the final judgment.

The doctrine of the second coming was first heard about 30 years ago, 1867, and has yearly gained many adherents. Many leading clergymen are believers in it.

This explanation is given fully, as it has much to do with Prof. Dimbleby's paper.

Times of the Gentiles.
One of the chief prophecies of the prophet Daniel, one on which all Bible students agree, is that as soon as the "times of the Gentiles" are fulfilled, and the Jews have served their allotted years of disownment: by God in punishment for their sins, they will be restored to Palestine as a nation, and there become the political factors of the world. Previous to their restoration, the power of the people used by God as an instrument for the oppression of the Jews will be broken. As an explanation of the term "times of the Gentiles" Bible students point out that when the Jews refused to accept Christ as the Messiah when He came to earth, they were cast off by God, and Christ turned to the Gentiles, who were given a period of the Christian dispensation is now nearing its nineteenth hundredth year.

To return to Prof. Dimbleby's pamphlet. Summarized in a few words, his claim is that according to their interpretation he makes of the prophecies, corroborated by astronomy, the "times of the Gentiles" are now practically at an end—they will expire this month, on Monday next, the 21st, and that immediately thereafter may be expected all of the great events of prophetic history: first the second coming of the Lord; second, the breaking of the Mohammedan power, the wresting of Jerusalem from Turkey, and the restoration of the Jews to their own land; then, third, the terrible period of 3 1/2 years known as the tribulation, and finally, the millennium.

A Key to Prophecy.

Prof. Pavley's pamphlet is replete with statistics and astronomical diagrams, before starting out. He explains that a prophetic day whenever it is said in the Bible may be regarded as the same as a year of our time. With reference to the end of the Gentile times he quotes Christ as saying "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled, and as a key to the prophecy, he says, "And the holy city shall be trodden under foot 40 and two months, forty-two months, or 42 days to the month, the writer claims are equivalent to 1,260 prophetic days or years. The Sirian march into Jerusalem in the year 70 A.D.; and to that 1260 years, and you have 1930 A.D., or 1898 A.D.—the promised end of the Mohammedan rule.

The Jewish Period.
Mr. Dimbleby points out that the Jews, according to the Bible were to be oppressed a period of 2,520 years. He figures out the 2,520 years is just expiring: Babylon, 70 years, 530 A.D. to 580 A.D.; Assyrians, 207 years, 606 A.D. to 813 A.D.; Total, 1260 years. In the year 580 A.D. Jerusalem was taken by the Saracens and the Mohammedan period in the present month will have consumed 1260 years of domination over Jerusalem, making the total of 2520 years of Jewish oppression.

Turkey's Fall.
The writer says: "Since the previous edition of this pamphlet has published, very marked events have occurred in Turkey indicating the near fulfillment of the prophecy of the Son of God, written in Luke xxi, 24, namely, that 'Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.' The recent disturbances in Turkey are connected with the end of the Gentile times. In Rev. xi, 2, we read that the Gentiles shall tread underfoot the holy city for forty-two months. These forty-two months, or 42 days to the month, are 1260 days, or years in the language of the prophecy.

"Now, when the historian, and others, say that the Saracen Mohammedans got possession of Jerusalem in the autumn of 637, so that when we add 1260 to that year we have September, 1897, as the end of the treading down of Jerusalem by the Mohammedans. We cannot, however, depend upon the accuracy of the date 637, because our years have been so much altered in form by Acts of Parliament. The date may have been earlier, or later by six months. The best way of dealing with it is by achronological measurement. We then get the true end of the Gentile times at Easter, 1898. This is the point of time fixed by several passages of Scripture. Jerusalem cannot be trodden down a moment later than 1898 A.D. unless we can quench the sun and stop the rotation of the earth."

Not Roman Catholicism.

Mr. Dimbleby continues: "It is easy to see how men have stumbled in understanding these prophecies, and we must all deplore the lamentable injury done to Scripture by writers, who because they lived in times of religious rivalry, have endeavored to show that the little horn is Roman Catholicism. They have done this in an uncertain spirit, and in defiance of the facts of history, and now that their opinions have proved to be erroneous, worldly and unchristian persons, instead of looking to see how the break-down has occurred, flippantly exclaim: 'All this about the end of the age and the coming of Christ has been said before and has not come true.' It could not come true. I am a Protestant myself but it is plain that the errors of these writers have arisen because they have sought to place a mote out of their brother's eye whilst a big beam has been in their own. Mr. Fleming in this way concluded that the end of the papal power and the world would come in 1848, and Mr. Elliott, with a view to run down the Roman Catholic Church, assigned the 1260 years to the existence of popery which he said began in 606, when Pope Boniface claimed universal power. By this the prophecies ended 1866.

"The great determining point of history and of prophecy is the year 630 A.D. when the Saracens took possession of Jerusalem and then proceeded to set up the abomination of desolation by erecting the Mosque of Omar on the spot where the Temple formerly stood. Jerusalem had been made tributary to pagan Rome in 397 and by falling into the hands of the Saracens in 636, completed 666 years of subjection to Roman domination. This was a marked fulfilment of prophecy.

"Now comes an important prophecy. In Dan. vii, 25, we read that the saints were to be given into the hands of the little horn (Mahomedan power, which arose out of the division of the empire of Alexander the Great) until a time, times, and a half, that is 1260 years. Hence they end in 1896, which will be our 1898 A.D. The reader will probably be aware that a time is 360 years, two times are therefore 720, and half a time 180 years, thus making 1260. It was so with the first 1260 years. All books of history show that the four universal empires—Babylonian, Medo-Per-

Get More and You Get Less

Why is it every sarsaparilla which tries to sell itself, ranges itself against Ayer's as the standard? Why is it that all have to offer extra inducements—bigger bottles, fancy wrappers, cheaper price—anything, everything, but the one inducement of quality?

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

has never been equaled by any cheap imitation of it, and quality tells, just as blood tells.

It is the Standard.

"I have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla for more than twenty-five years, and have never heard anything but words of praise from my customers; not a single complaint has ever reached me. A preparation must possess great merit to maintain such a reputation. I believe your sarsaparilla to be the best blood purifier that has ever been introduced to the general public. I often hear other manufacturers say that this is 'as good as Ayer's,' but no one ever yet heard it said that Ayer's was 'as good' as any other kind. They always set Ayer's up as the standard of excellence."—S. F. Dorcas, Duluth, Minn.

Asian, Grecian and Roman—continued 1260 years.

Babylon Falls.
"Now let us notice what is to occur at the completion of this second period of 1260 years, thus completing 2520 years. Observe! Inasmuch as the little horn prevailed against the saints until the Ancient of Days appeared, and this little horn was to have the saints given into his hands until a time, times and a half (which were 1260 years ending, as we see in 580 A.D. from 436 A.D., when the Saracens entered Jerusalem), it is evident that 580 A.D. is the appearance of the Ancient of Days, viz., in 1898 A.D. of our era. At this grand event—likely in the mid-heavens, not on earth—the thrones are placed and judgments begin concerning the government of the world and the establishment of the everlasting kingdom. The saints seem to be the judges, and civil governments are approved. Babylon falls and the 2520 years of the Gentiles end."

The Second Advent.

Of the second advent of the Lord, the writer says: "Respecting the second advent, concerning which so many letters reach me, some men remark that the Lord said, 'Of that day and hour knoweth no man.' The Greek does not really mean this. The words are 'Concerning that day and hour,' which may refer more to the incidents may have been left an open question, for in some way the administration of the Divine government is in several parts of Scripture contingent on the actions and character of mankind. The resurrection of Nineveh is sufficiently conclusive on this point. But I would grant the interpretation. We do not know the day or hour. More than this we do not know the month, nay, we know not the year. But we well understand the period, because in Dan. vii, 13, it is definitely stated in words of great sublimity. We are told that the Son of Man comes when the Ancient of Days—when the Everlasting Father—comes into the mid-heavens, or as he came when the law was delivered on the heights of Sinai."

"It therefore appears that the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ must be shortly before or soon after the commencement of the 30 years from 1898 A.D. to 1928 A.D. We know this because the Ancient of Days comes before the little horn ceases to prevail. The little horn is to be converted at the end of the Gentile times (Rom. xi, 25) and they will not be placed in their own land till after the resurrection (Compare Ezek. xxxvii, 12, 14, with Dan. xii, 1, 2, which are important passages of instruction). We also know that the first of holy resurrection takes place when the Lord comes (1 Thes. iv, 14-16 and 1 Cor. xv, 51-52). So that whilst on one hand we must avoid supposition, we must not rush to the opposite extreme by ignoring what is written, otherwise Scripture has no meaning at all. There is a statement made in Dan. xii, 10, respecting our knowledge of the great prophecies at the time of the end, and we must not overlook it. We are told that 'the wise shall understand.' This is written to encourage our study and to impress our minds with the fact that prophecies are written to convince us that the Scriptures are inspired."

ular during their present visit to Pe-varied and interesting character. Mr.

Will Give Peterborough a Wide Mouth
Yesterday morning Magistrate Dumble had before him at the Police Court an old offender named John Smith, who was charged with vagrancy. Constable McGinty proved the case. Smith was discharged upon his promising to quit the town at once. He gave the requisite promise, and added an earnest wish that he might be hanged if ever he set a foot in Peterborough again.

Grand Trunk Head Office
The Toronto papers are urging the removal of the head office of the Grand Trunk from Montreal to Toronto. The idea is a good one. Next to Peterborough, the Queen City is best suited for an important concern like the Grand Trunk. There is nothing about it, with the rapidly developing west, Montreal is a trifle too far away from the centre of gravity.

Caution to Bicyclists
It seems out of place to revert to it to-day, but there is nothing like doing a thing when the impulse is present. The Chief of Police is going to enforce the bicycle by-law, and he is going to enforce it from the very first of this season. There have been some glaring violations of it during the past few days, and these are offered as a tip to obstreperous cyclists to keep off the sidewalks and carry lanterns at night.

Railway and River Rates
The increases in revenue that have been shown by both the G.T.R. and the C.P.R. since they commenced to cut rates have been most gratifying to the management. Seeing that the traffic has increased to such an extent, Canadians are asking themselves why the present rates should not be made permanent, and why there should not also be a cut in the freight rates as well. The cheapening of transport here, as well as in other countries, appears to bring about a great increase of traffic and income.

Fire Sale at E. F. Mason & Co's
The recent fire at E. F. Mason & Co's has had the effect of slightly damaging by smoke the immense stock of groceries and provisions carried by this firm, and in order to facilitate renovation and make room for new goods a clearing sale has been inaugurated and is now in full swing. Everything must go, and at almost your own price. Don't procrastinate! Call to-day!

Peterborough Boys Struck Gold
Lost Saturday's Montreal Herald contained the following:
"Early in the 80's gold was found on the Stewart river by miners, president among whom were two brothers named Boswell, from Peterborough, Ont."

We may add that the brothers referred to were the sons of the late Geo.
Boswell, who operated a sawmill years ago in Peterborough. They were remarkable for the daring manner in which they ran their rafts down the river. Their father was an uncle of Mr. J. E. Boswell, of town.

Pile's Pile's Itching Pile's
Symptoms—Moisture intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr.

How They do it in Lindsay Lindsay Post: The curiers made a brave showing last night at St. Andrew's church, when the annual sermon was preached by Rev. J. W.
Macmillan, one of the club's chaplains—himself as enthusiastic a curier as the town contains. The edifice was crowded, and the discourse was worthy of the large attendance and the preacher's high reputation. As we purpose issuing a special curling edition in a few weeks we defer the publication of the sermon till then.

Military Instruction in the School
The Department of Education has issued a set of regulations providing that any High School or Collegiate Institute Board may establish classes in military instruction, receiving therefor a grant of $50. The matter has been arranged with the Minister of Militia and Colonies and will be officers will be held regularly. A class will be held in Toronto next July and August to qualify High School teachers as military instructors of the young ideas. These High School cadet corps are, on no account, to be employed on active service.

Mother of 26 Children
A French-Canadian woman, sixty-six years of age, was in court, asking for warrant against her son, the first-born of a family of twenty-six. Madame Dechane lives at 236 Panet street, and has been a widow for the last six months. During that time the son, who is forty-two years of age, has done nothing, it is alleged, but live on his mother's hard-earned wages. It is stated he sold everything he could lay his hands on, and latterly has begun to abuse his mother. The case was brought through the instrumentality of Mr. Marshall, agent for the Society for the Protection of Women and Children.—Montreal Herald.

Between-season Advertising Between-season advertising properly conducted is of vast importance to every branch of trade, for it is then that the purchasing public lays its plans for future operations. A wise farmer never sows his seed carelessly because the harvest time is some months distant, nor will a wise merchant advertise carelessly merely because his business season is not yet at hand. Furthermore, to wait until the harvest time arrives before sowing the seed has never been found productive of crops, and the merchant who waits until the rush commences before advertising should not feel disappointed if his wiser competitors get the trade.

Peterborough's Chance
The Montreal Herald is rather rough on the claims of Peterborough for the C. W. A. meet. It says: "Ottawa, with one of the fastest quarter mile bicycle tracks in the country, certainly deserves recognition over a place that has nothing better to offer than a horse track. It has been found, too, that small places cannot offer the proper hotel accommodation, and in this respect Ottawa is likely to benefit by the vote of wheelmen who had to contend with indifferent accommodation at Waterloo one year and in Champagne another. Wheelmen are coming to view the place with a grain of salt, and it must be able to take care of it, and it is this view that is likely to help Ottawa very largely."

The Opening of Navigation
There are some who think that with the ice off the coast and the first surface in the canals, that an early opening of navigation between Montreal and the lakes is insured. But such is not the case. The lake vessels will not proceed to load up until they are certain to meet the ice going vessels at Montreal. As in this case they must wait at Montreal for the European vessels, into which the lake boats' freight is to be placed, or unloading into a warehouse they will have to return westward empty. The movements of the ocean vessels are governed by the ordinary in connection with our seasons. They plan to arrive at our eastern ports early in May, and the fact that they could come this year in March will have no effect on their arrangements. It will be the latter part of April or beginning of May still.

At the Depots
Did you ever notice as you travel the "ornaments" at the stations as you pass through? We refer to the longers who frequent the depots, not the corners and goers, nor those who go to meet friends or bid friends good-bye. The Times man has been amongst them—but "on biz" of course. The loungers are of all sorts and sizes. What a sight! Everything is in a state of confusion. The depots, the corn-cob pipe gang, the beer-blot crowd, the man with the "yeller" dog, boys, guys, "weary Wil-lies," trunks, from school, and other specimens of humanity, mingling together in a most unbecoming manner.
The photo of which would make a fair background for a label on a bottle of hog cholera preventative. Just imagine what a historian who writes up a Canadian from a near window would say of the people, if he were to follow his own honest convictions.

The Street Railway Project
Editor Morning Times:
Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me space to bring a question before the ratepayers whether a Council elected for two years may have the power to commit the ratepayers for twenty years in paying every year one thousand dollars for a scheme of an electric railway. I hope the ratepayers will consider the matter well before committing themselves to such a scheme. I have no doubt that if our Street Railway Co. expected in such an undertaking a paying business, they would not be slow in getting the preference before outsiders. The public are well aware of how reasonable they are dealt with by the railway company. What guarantee has the public as to what charges they will make if the public if they would undertake the much-needed improvement of our town, which has been a disgrace for many years past. The money the town has paid for years for lawless is a most shameful advertisement for Peterborough streets. Thanking you, Mr. Editor,

WM. LECH.
Peterborough, March 22, 1898.

An Idea for the Town Council
Two general systems of improved garbage disposal may now be said to prevail in this country, and each of these has been subjected to the most thorough scientific tests and appliances.
These are reduction or utilization, which manipulates the waste and recovers a certain proportion of commercial or merchantable products, and second, cremation, or absolute destruction by intense heat. All the reduction methods proceed upon the general plan of steaming in digestors or "cooking" tanks as the first process, the variations in the several processes arising from the different methods of extracting the grease and treating the "tankage," the residue in one case being used as fuel and in the other being driven off the water and grease that are afterward separated, the remainder being dried and ground, while in other cases naphtha is employed as the agent for securing the fats in the most effective manner, the grease and naphtha being afterward separated by means of distillation. Still another plan is that of adding sulphuric acid at some stage of the work, a part of this being recovered afterward. One objection brought against reduction is the fact that the work cannot be carried on in the vicinity of dwellings without creating offensive odors and causing complaints.—New York Sun.

OUR VOLUNTEERS

Col. R. W. Bell Will Attend the D. R. A.
Meeting To-day

The report of the Council of the Dominion Rifle Association to be presented at the annual meeting to-day, when Col. R. W. Bell will be among the members present, is an admirable statement of the work done last year.
The number of rifle associations affil-iating was as follows: Provincial seven, county and other rifle associations thirty-two, a decrease of five associations as compared with 1896.

The expenditure on account of the Bisley team amounted to $6005, an increase of $409, this is accounted for by the team sailing a week earlier than usual, and the consequent expense entailed for subsistence in England prior to the opening of the competition at Bisley.

Receipts from ordinary sources for the year amounted to $16,816, which, with the balance of $1649 carried forward from last year, shows a total of $18,465. General expenditure amounted to $16,835, leaving a balance at credit of $1,630. Against this, however, the Bisley building claims outstanding (which include $3,500 due the Ontario Bank, have to be taken into account as liabilities, amounting in all to $800.
Deducting the balance in hand from this amount, the net liabilities of the association under the head of Bisley building are $6249. To offset this liability there is the Bisley building and its valuable contents.

ONTARIO AGRICULTURAL UNION

Co-operative Experiments in Agriculture—
Interesting Matter From Prof. C. A. Zavits

Upwards of 1,000 varieties of farm crops have been tested in the Experimental Department of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, within the past twelve years. The list of hundreds of them have been grown for the last five years in succession. Nearly all the Canadian sorts and several hundred new varieties imported by the Experimental Department from different parts of Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia, and the United States, have been included in these carefully conducted experiments. Some of the new varieties have done exceptionally well and have already been distributed over Ontario, through the medium of the Experimental Union, with very satisfactory results. The Siberian Oats, Mammoth Barley, Pearson's Bearded Spring Wheat, and the Mammoth Cuban Yellow Dent, Wisconsin Earliest White Dent, and the Salzer's North Dakota varieties of corn, which are now becoming so popular in Ontario, were imported by the Experimental Department and after being thoroughly tested were distributed in small quantities.

The present system of co-operative experimental work in agriculture was started in 1886 with 60 plots, which were situated on twelve different farms in Ontario. Since that date, however, the work has increased from year to year and in 1897 there were 11,497 plots, which were situated on 2,835 farms.

Interested persons in Ontario who wish to join in the work may select any one of the experiments for 1898, and inform the director at the Agricultural College, Guelph, of the choice made. All material will be furnished entirely free of charge to each applicant, but he will be expected to conduct the test according to the instructions sent with the seed, and to report the results of the test as soon as possible after harvest.

List of Experiments for 1898.
1. Testing nitrate of soda, superphos-phate, muriate of potash and no manure with Corn.
2. Testing nitrate of soda, superphos-phate, muriate of potash, mixture, and no manure with Mangels.
3. Growing three Leguminous crops for Green Fodder.
4. Growing three mixtures of grain
for Green Fodder.
5. Testing four varieties of Millet.
6. Testing four varieties of Grasses.
7. Testing four varieties of Clover.
8. Testing three varieties of Buckwheat.
9. Testing three varieties of Spring
Wheat and one variety of Spring
Rye.
10. Testing four varieties of Barley.
11. Testing five varieties of Oats.
12. Testing four varieties of Peas.
13. Testing three varieties of Beans.
14. Testing five varieties of Carrots.
15. Testing four varieties of Mangels and one variety of Sugar Beets.
16. Testing two varieties of Swedish and two varieties of Fall Turnips.
17. Testing six varieties of Onions.
Material for either No. 1 or No. 2 experiment will be sent by express, and for each of the others by rail.
The supply of material being limited, those who apply first will be surest of obtaining the desired outfit. It might be well for each applicant to make a second choice for fear the first could not be granted.

Particular varieties need not be mentioned as all the kinds to be distributed are those which have done exceptionally well upon the trial plots in the Experimental Department.
C. A. ZAVITS, Director, Guelph
Agricultural College, March 21, 1898.

CANADIANS PREPARING

Dominion Rifle Association

Meet at Ottawa

MONEY FOR THE MILITIA

Minister of Militia Foresees Increased Funds

To be Ever Ready for War—More Money for Militia—The New Houses—Free Ammunition—Lord Aberdeen's Assistance

(Special to the Times)

Ottawa, March 23.—The annual meeting of the Dominion Rifle Association was held this forenoon. The president, Hon. J. M. Gibson, presided, and there was a good attendance, among them being Lord Aberdeen, Hon. Dr. Horden, Minister of Militia, Major-General Gensoult, Col. Plant, Deputy Minister of Militia, Lt.-Col. Aylmer, Adjutant-General, Lt.-Col. Lake, Quartermaster-General, Lt.-Col. Tilton, Lt.-Col. White, Lt.-Col. Hodgins, Lt.-Col. Macpherson, Lt.-Col. MacDonald and Major Sherwood, Col. Delanere and Lt.-Col. Masson, Toronto; Lt.-Col. R. W. Bell, Peterborough; and Lt.-Col. Hughes, M. P.

MORE FUNDS FOR MILITIA.

The president, Lt.-Col. Gibson, in moving the adoption of the annual report, referred to the new building at Biele, which was almost completed. It would be necessary, however, to make another attack on the Government for an additional expenditure. The expenditure on account of the Biele team was $6,000, as against $5,650 last year. The team did creditable work at Biele, but did not show up to their standard in the contest for the Kellogg Cup. The refund, however, made the expenditure on the Biele team $2,780 less than for the year previous. The liability on the Biele building was $6,249.

THE NEW RANGES.

The chairman proceeded to say that the association held its last meeting on the Rideau rifle range. The next meeting would be held on the new range at Rockcliffe. He expected that the new range would be ready in time for the meeting. It was a fact, he said, that the association would have to depend in the future, as in the past, upon the bounty and goodwill of the Dominion Government. He was satisfied that the present Government and the present Minister of Militia would continue to do all that they possibly could in the interests of the association.

FREE AMMUNITION.

A matter which was of great interest to the association was that of ammunition. In this connection, he would throw out the suggestion that free ammunition would be given at the next annual meeting of the association. He would hope that this could be done.

In regard to provincial associations, he would like to see them also get liberal treatment. As to local associations and local corps, he would ask the Minister to take their case into serious consideration. He concluded by referring to the presence of Lord Aberdeen, and moving the adoption of the annual report, which was carried.

THANKS TO LORD ABERDEEN.

Lt.-Col. Hughes moved a vote of thanks to Lord Aberdeen for his contributions to, and the interest he had always taken in, the work of the association.

Lord Aberdeen, in reply, said that whether this was the last year or not, he would be one with them in the hope that there would be no gap or no hiatus on account of that, as far as his contributions to the association were concerned.

The president then presented an address for the association to Lt.-Col. Gibson, who had acted for so many years as secretary of the association.

Lt.-Col. Gibson made a brief but appropriate reply.

Lt.-Col. Gibson moved a vote of thanks to the Government for the assistance given to the association. He hoped they would also aid the association in liquidating the debt on the Biele building.

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA.

Lt.-Col. Borden, Minister of Militia, said that from his long connection with the militia, he might be accused of taking too favorable a view of their interests. He hoped that the revenues of the country would soon permit granting larger sums to the association, and place it in a position which it deserved by showing a surplus. The object of the association was a desirable one, and in the interests of the country. He referred to the interest of Lord Aberdeen in not only the association, but in the affairs of Canada generally. He promised to try and get an additional grant for the Biele building, although he did tell the Commons the last time that he would not call again. He could not promise free ammunition, but he would try and give it at a moderate price. Free ammunition was apt to be wasted, a small price would help to guard against this. As to the new rifle range, he expected to have it ready in July.

READY FOR TROUBLE.

In conclusion, Dr. Borden said that Canada was not looking for trouble, but it was only right that every self-respecting country should be ready for any emergency, if it ever occurred. Canada was part of the British Empire, and as such Britain was ready to assist us; if so Canada ought to be ready to assist the mother country, and there was no way in which this could be better done than by learning thoroughly the use of the rifle.

AN INVITATION TO AUSTRALIANS.

Lt.-Col. Hughes moved a resolution inviting the teams from Australia and New Zealand that attend the Biele meeting this year to return home by way of Canada. This was carried.

Lt.-Col. Gibson was re-elected president by a standing vote. Lt.-Col. Tilton, in moving the resolution for his re-election, said that there was one constituency that would stand by the president.

Lt.-Col. Sam Hughes, M. P., was re-elected vice-president.

All vice-presidents by provinces were also re-elected.

BRITAIN AS PEACEMAKER

Suggestion That She Mediate Between Spain and the States

No aid for Spain in Europe—Plenty of Aid and Sympathy but no Help in Case of War

(Special to the Times)

London, March 23.—The Daily News this morning editorially propounds a question whether there is any possibility that in the present critical stage of the relations between the United States and Spain, a disinterested offer of mediation by Great Britain on the basis of granting independence to Cuba would lead to an understanding.

NO HELP FOR SPAIN.

SOME SYMPATHY, BUT NO PRACTICAL AID FROM THE POWERS.

London, March 23.—While Spain is winning the admiration of the continental powers by her preparations for unequal combat, she will get no support beyond words, if advice received here are to be believed. A sympathetic note from Austria and a telegram from the Emperor William, she may get, but they will only add one gun.

Naval experts are speculating on what Spain can do with her two flying squadrons. A voyage across the Atlantic would find them short of coal and ill prepared for operations on the "American" coast.

The "American" fleet, it is generally believed, can prevent their entering Cuban ports for supplies. It is stated that the torpedo flotilla will sail this week for Porto Rico.

WAR HAS COMMENCED

BRITISH CAVALRY ENGAGE IN TWO FIGHTS WITH DERVISHES.

(Special to the Times)

ATBARA, on the Nile, March 23.—An Anglo-Egyptian cavalry patrol was in contact with a large party of Dervish horsemen on Monday 11 miles up the river.

A smart engagement took place, in which hand-to-hand encounters with spears occurred, and the Dervishes were driven back.

The horse artillery went to the support of the Anglo-Egyptian cavalry and shelled the Dervishes at fifteen hundred yards, doing considerable execution.

The Anglo-Egyptian loss was seven men killed and eight men wounded. The patrol returned to Rashidi before midnight, bringing the wounded.

No British officers were wounded. A force of 400 Dervish cavalry appeared a few miles from here on Tuesday morning.

The patrol met by a squadron of cavalry and a force of Sudanese, who drove off the Dervishes with considerable loss, following them some miles beyond Atbara.

Mihmoud's main force occupies the same position.

EMPLOYED A LAWYER

SENATE INVESTIGATION COMMITTEE AT WORK ON DRUMMOND RAILWAY DEAL.

(Special to the Times)

OTTAWA, Ont., March 21.—The committee appointed by the Senate to enquire into the Drummond County Railway affair met this morning for organization. Senator Miller was appointed chairman, and it was decided to employ Donald McMaster of Montreal as counsel. The Liberal members of the committee objected to the engagement of counsel as a needless expense.

It was decided to interchange evidence with the Commons committee, which is now sitting upon this case.

NOT GOING JUST YET

THE DEPARTURE OF THE KLONDIKE TROOPS DELAYED FOR A MONTH.

(Special to the Times)

KINGSTON, March 22.—Nothing further has been heard at Tete du Pont Barracks regarding the departure of the Klondike contingent. It is expected they will not leave before April 22. The previous arrangement, calling for mobilization of the troops at Ottawa this week has been cancelled, the Minister of Militia having been counselled to delay the departure of the troops for a month.

ELECTION PROTESTS

NOW IN THE AIR

It is Said That Both Local Ridings are in It

THE MONEY NEARLY READY

The Election Courts of Ontario to be a Fat Field for the Lawyers

Mr. Stratton on Behalf of the Liberals to Make Counter Protest in West Peterborough—What is to be Gained by Seeking the Aid of the Courts?—The People Wary of Political Disturbance

"The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceeding fine," remarked a staunch dyed-in-the-wool Tory to the Times yesterday. "You can say, if you wish, in the Times that a protest is not only to be entered in West Peterborough but also in the East, and the money for the purpose has been nearly all subscribed and collected. The Conservative party in this county is not going to be turned down so easily, especially on the eve of victory." The Times man was not satisfied, but rang up one of the managers of the Conservative "machine" in order to have the above either verified or contradicted. The gentleman was reluctant in making any statement, and said that the matter was being considered by the party leaders. He gave us to understand that a protest in both of the ridings was exceedingly probable.

Mr. Stratton informed the Times that should a protest be entered he would hit back with all the vigor he possessed. A counter protest would be entered against Mr. Garvin as well as protests in several other ridings, including the two Victorias, where Conservatives have been elected.

Mr. Stratton does not appear to attach much importance to the protest matter. While he frankly admits that he is tired of elections, he would enter another contest with great alacrity, should the courts deprive him temporarily of this seat, and he is satisfied of being re-elected by a larger majority than ever.

On the other hand, the Conservatives contend that they have evidence of personal bribery, and can disqualify Mr. Stratton. With a new man they claim they can redeem the riding. Even should they not succeed in turning Mr. Stratton down by disqualification, they seem to think that the electors will, like rats, forsake a "sinking ship," as they claim the Hardy Government to be, and vote for the Conservative candidate. Besides, the party will go into the fight this time with money, and will be able to buy as many votes as they may their opponents did on the first of March. Mr. Stratton is in Ottawa at present, but was seen previous to his departure by the Times, and re-interested his previous statement that not only would the Victoria seats be protested, but a protest would be entered against the election of Mr. Whitney, the Conservative leader.

The Liberals, he said, have plenty of money, and if this sort of warfare is to be indulged in, they would give their opponents enough of it.

The Mail and Empire states that Premier Hardy has decided to enter forty protests all told. The same paper also states that the Premier has his hands full making peace with all the warring elements within his own camp. Messrs. Dryden and Gibson, the defeated Ministers, want constitutions, and refuse point blank to be cast aside. Then Messrs. Ewart, Conmee and Stratton have been promised portfolios, when, as everybody knows, there isn't enough of these coveted articles to go around. Altogether, the outlook, no matter which way you view it, is exceedingly interesting.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 23, 1898

THE STICKINE RIVER RAILWAY DEAL

That the House of Commons should have passed the second reading of the Bill authorizing the Government to enter into the contract with Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann for the construction of a narrow-gauge railway between the Stickine River and Teslin Lake, is only what was to be expected. Any other course involved the defeat of the Government, and there was no reason to believe that its supporters in Parliament were likely to do that and take the risk, either of the Opposition coming into office, or by a dissolution, they themselves being compelled to face their constituencies at this particular time. The result of the Ontario elections in itself was amply sufficient to indicate to the dullest intellect that the present is scarcely a propitious moment to seek for a renewal of their confidence by the electors. That the Government has made a great bargain; that the negotiations connected with the contract were badly conducted, and have resulted in an unsatisfactory result; that great principles of the Liberal creed were not only disregarded, but deliberately outraged, no honest man pretends to deny, and members of the House realized full well that there are enough voters who do not approve of such a flagrant violation of all these things as is involved in this contract, to probably make the result of an election very unpleasant. But the fact of the House of Commons passing the second reading of the Bill, in no manner alters the situation. The debates which took place on it; the manner in which Parliament was adjourned, in order that members of the Government and of the House might be able to go to the assistance of Mr. Hardy showed very plainly that the arrangement proposed to be entered into does not give what is claimed for it, and that the argument that not a day's delay should take place in the approval of the contract was without sincerity. No one who pretends that the contract secures an all-Canadian route, or that it will overcome the difficulties, the existence of which was the only ground for action which ignored the prerogatives of Parliament and the safe-guarding of the general interests from the evils of monopoly. Even the assertion that a sleigh road up the Stickine River would be secured by the commencement of this month, has proved to be without foundation, since the latest advices from Wrangel show that the contractors' forces were still encamped at the mouth of the river last week. It is well known to people here that other parties offered to make the sleigh road for $5,000, and there is no reason to doubt but that save for the fact that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann had undertaken to do the work, other individuals interested in getting up the River as speedily as possible, would have undertaken the task at their own expense.

So far nothing has occurred which, in any manner weakens the objections raised to the contract. On the other hand, much has transpired which shows that the criticism against the contract is well-founded. The Government, with full information in its possession from its own officials, allowed months to pass without taking any action. Then, on the eve of the session, it hastily concluded an arrangement absurdly one-sided, and which, if carried out, would not yield what is the only possible excuse for making it—the securing of a route entirely within Canadian control, and free from any possibility of foreign interference or interruption.

Where is Herr Andree? If he ascended in the balloon to reach the North Pole he should now be within reach of the civilized world, or he is dead. It may be a wild guess, but it is quite possible that he never did go up, and that he is now quietly lying low in some out-of-the-way place preparing his book and lecture on the trip he never took.—London News.

She Blocked the Street
That young woman on Geneva St. should either get a curtain for her bedroom window or close the shutters when she retires. On Tuesday night a gang of young fellows blocked the sidewalk near the army barracks while watching the girl go through the process of preparing to retire.—St. Catharines Journal.

Old Age and Spring

Paine's Celery Compound invigorates and Strengthens Those Advanced in Years

IF YOU FEEL OLD, THE GREAT MEDICINE WILL GIVE YOU THE VIGOR AND HEALTH OF YOUTH

Paine's Celery Compound Has Made More old People Happy than all Other Combined Remedies

Every one, as spring approaches, should take time to purify the blood, strengthen the nerves and regulate the digestive organs.

This is the time when old people need a tonic and strength-giver—something that will restore them to that condition of health that conduces to make old age happy, cheerful and bright.

Old people should carry home with them to-day—not by-and-by—a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound. It will certainly banish the rheumatism and neuralgia that make life unbearable; it will drive out of the system all impurities and make the life stream flow fresh and pure. It will banish weakness and all languid feelings, and impart the vigor and activity of full manhood and womanhood.

Paine's Celery Compound has given new life and long years to thousands of old people in the past. It is the only medicine that will fully meet the needs and expectations of all in declining years.

An old gentleman, Mr. J. Holdsworth, 104 Claremont St., Toronto, says:

"I was taken sick last summer, and was in bed for five weeks or more, and my physician was attending me all the time. My case was pronounced to be weakness of the heart and old age, for I am now seventy-eight years old.

"I kept getting worse until my recovery was considered hopeless. One of my relatives recommended me to use Paine's Celery Compound, which I did with good results. After the first dose I felt relieved, and after a few days I was able to leave my bed and walk around. I used four bottles, and found your medicine to be a most excellent remedy, as I am now quite well. I hope other sufferers will receive as much benefit as I received."

A Woman's Narrative —OF— WATERLOO

The following letter was written by Katharine Arden, daughter of the first Lord Alvanley. With her mother and sister she was a resident in Brussels at the time of the great battle and took an active part in nursing the wounded. The letter is addressed to her aunt, Miss Bootle Wilbraham, afterward Mrs. Barnes. It is frank, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, from Windsor to Ormskirk in Lancashire by Miss Arden's uncle, E. Bootle Wilbraham (afterward Lord Skelmersdale), July 17, 1815.

Miss Arden's orthography and punctuation have been left unaltered. BRUSSELS, Sunday 9th July—My Dearest Aunt, I can assure you most truly that I did not require reminding to fulfill the promise I had made you of writing, and every day since our return from Antwerp I have labored for the purpose, but what with visiting the sick, and making bandages and lint, I can assure you my time has been pretty well occupied. As my patients are, thank goodness, most of them now convalescent, I think the best way I can reward my dear aunt's patience, is by giving her a long account of our hopes, fears and feelings, from the time the troops were ordered to march down to the present moment. (If you are tired with my long account remember you expressed a wish in Mamma's letter to hear all our proceedings.)

On Thursday the 15th of June, we went to a great ball that the Duchess of Richmond gave, at which we expected to see from Generals down to Ensigns, all the military men, who, with their regiments, had been for some time quartered from eighteen to thirty miles from this town, and consequently so much nearer the frontiers; nor were we disappointed, with the exception of three Generals, every officer high in the army was to be seen. Though for nearly ten weeks we had been daily expecting the arrival of the French troops on the frontiers, and had rather been wondering at their delay, yet when on our arrival at the ball, we were told that the troops had orders to march at 3 in the morning and that every officer must join his regiment by that time, as the French were advancing, you cannot possibly picture to yourself the dismay and consternation that appeared in every face. Those who had brothers and sons to be engaged, openly gave way to their grief, as the last parting of many took place at this most terrible ball; others (and thank heaven we ranked among that number, for in the midst of my greatest fears I still felt thankfulness, was my prominent feeling that my dearest Mamma was not here), who had no near relation, yet felt that among the many many friends we all had there, it was impossible that all should escape, and that the next time we might hear of them, they might be numbered with the dead; in fact, my dear aunt, I cannot describe to you my mingled feelings, you will, however, I am sure, understand them. I feel quite inadequate to express them.

We staid at this ball as short a time as we could, but long enough to see express after express arrive to the Duke of Wellington, to hear of aides de camp arriving breathless with news, and to see, what was much more extraordinary than all, the Duke's equanimity a little discomposed. We took a mournful farewell of some of our best friends, and returned to do anything but repose. The morning dawned most lovely, and before 7 o'clock we had seen 12,000 Brunswickers, Scotch and English pass before our windows, of whom one-third before night were mingled with the dust. Mamma took a farewell of the Duke as he passed by, but Fanny and myself, at last wearied out, had before he went, retired to bed. The first person that we saw in the morning brought us the news, that the advance guard of the French had in the night come on as far as Genappe, eighteen miles off, and had had several skirmishes with the Prussians. This intelligence as you may suppose, did not tend to compose us, but still everything went on in quiet calmness, when, at 3 o'clock, a loud cannonading commenced, which upon the ramparts was heard nearly as plain as we do the tower guns in London; it went on without intermission until 8 o'clock, when it was thought to appear more distant, and therefore hopes were entertained that the French had retreated, nothing certain was known, but it was reported that the Prussians had been principally attacked, and were rather giving way, while the Highlanders and the regiments who had marched from here in the morning joined them and completely repulsed the French.

So far the news was good, but still the English had fought, and what our loss was nobody knew, however, we bore up pretty well till above (about) 12 o'clock, when a gentleman (Mr. Leigh of Lyme, in Cheshire) came from off the field of battle, where he had been looking on, with the intelligence that there had been a dreadful battle, the Duke of Brunswick was killed, and that the Brigade of First Guards and the Highlanders were literally cut to pieces. I will not attempt to say what we felt, for it would be quite vain; I must only tell you that that regiment of Guards contained all our greatest friends, independent of our having to regret them as Englishmen. The next morning, by 8 o'clock, Saturday 17th, numbers of Belgians and other of our brave allies came flying into the town with the report that the French were retreating, but a temporary fright, as a bulletin was published officially saying that we had gained a great victory and the French were retreating, neither of which was true. About 10 o'clock the real horrors of war began to appear, and though we were spared hearing cannonading, yet the sights that we saw were infinitely more dreadful than anything we had heard the day before, I mean the sight of wounded.

I must tell you, before I proceed, that Sir James Gambier, the Counsel-General to the Paymaster, who is the best man that ever was, came to us about 8 o'clock and told us that there really had been a severe engagement, but that we had the advantage; that though the Guards had suffered most dreadfully, yet that their loss was not quite so great as had been reported, but that the Highlanders were literally nearly annihilated, after having performed prodigies of valor; and very good proof had been given that they had suffered by the numbers who were brought in here literally cut to pieces. Our house being unfortunately near the gate where they were brought in, most of them passed our door, their wounds were none of them dress, and barely bound up, the waggoners were piled up to a degree almost incredible, and numbers for whom there was no room were obliged, faint and bleeding, to follow on foot; their heads, being what had most suffered, having been engaged with cavalry, were often so much bound up that they were unable to see, and therefore held by the waggoners, in order to know their road. Everybody as you may suppose pressed forward, anxious to be of some service to the poor wounded hero's but the people had orders that those who could go on should proceed to Antwerp, to make room for those who were to follow (dreadful idea), and therefore we could be of no further use to them than giving them refreshments as they passed.

In the middle of the day we heard further particulars of the last night's battle, and if all danger had been removed far from us, which heaven knows was very far from being so, we still should have felt nervous at the danger that had nearly befallen us. Conceive it having been run so near, that the French were within ten minutes of getting possession of the road to Brussels, which had they once gained, in all probability they would have reached the town in three hours. Providence, however, ordered it otherwise, and the Guards, who had marched from Engheim, twenty-seven miles off, arrived at the lucky moment and got possession of the road. They were shortly afterward joined by the Highlanders, who some of them fought with their knapsacks on, having marched twenty miles, and, accordingly, were enabled to keep their ground against the French. The conduct of the English soldiers on that day was perfect, and would have been sufficient to have immortalized them without the addition of the Duke's battle, after which the Duke of Wellington said he should never feel sufficiently grateful to the Guards for their conduct on both days, which from the Duke means more than it would from anybody else. Our hero, Wellington, who had been deceived with the intelligence that was given him (for it is said that Bony had bribed most of his outposts), and had no idea that the French were so near, nor advancing in such force, was so distressed when he discovered the truth that, as usual, totally regardless of his personal safety he was exposing himself in the most dreadful way (I am speaking of the Friday's business at Quatre Bras, so named from four roads meeting), and already a party of French horse, having marked him out, were rushing on him with the greatest violence when the Highlanders, who saw his danger, and it is said he never was in so great before, rushed between him and the French, and with the lives of hundreds of his still more precious men. On coming off the field, the Duke told some whom he met with that their conduct had been noble, and he should make a good report of them; of the Ninety-second Regiment, out of 700 men, but 150 remain to share the glory.

But to resume my narrative. We remained the whole of Saturday in great suspense, to know what the armies were about, and whether the French were really retreating as had been reported; about 4 o'clock in the day we were dreadfully undeceived, by being told from very good authority that instead of the enemy it was Lord Wellington who had retreated, and who with his whole army were within ten miles of the town; the reason given for his doing so was that the Prussians had been attacked on the Friday evening whilst they were quietly cooking, and that having lost a tremendous number of men, Blucher had judged it prudent to retire, which being the case, he had left Lord Wellington's left flank so exposed that it was impossible for him to remain where he was, and that he had therefore retreated to a strong position near Waterloo, whilst our cavalry were engaged in playing before them, to hide, as much as possible, their retreat from the French. It was likewise added that it was to be hoped that the Prussians would rejoin the English, as at that present time the armies were near nine miles asunder, and that orders had been issued by the Duke for all the baggage to be sent from the army through this town, and for the wounded

A TUG ELOPEMENT

It is only after much consideration and weighing of the matter that I am able to force myself to the point of telling the truth about the marriage and attempt at elopement which preceded the ceremony. And the determination to explain the matter briefly but fully is made simply in justice to patience and her father, Samuel F. Yelnik, Esq., president of the Municipal and half a dozen other great financial concerns, for now I can afford both to pity him and laugh at him.

Furthermore, the newspapers published such ridiculous stories at the time that they really made us all ashamed, telling, as they did, how I chartered a steam yacht and snatched Patience from her father's arms and carried her away to see on the palatial craft on which a clergyman was awaiting us, and of the demands Mr. Yelnik made upon the navy department to send a warship after us, and how he nearly succeeded because of immense contributions to the presidential campaign fund.

Of course only the newspaper illustrations printed this last stuff, for it was pure stuff and nonsense. Nevertheless the wild stories were sent all over the country, and I had, how I chartered a steam yacht and snatched Patience from her father's arms and carried her away to see on the palatial craft on which a clergyman was awaiting us, and of the demands Mr. Yelnik made upon the navy department to send a warship after us, and how he nearly succeeded because of immense contributions to the presidential campaign fund.

Well, to begin with, I did think a great deal of Patience, there's no use in denying facts—and I had been in love with her from boyhood. During the last year I had written with her more than usual, seeing her at home or on the links of the Country Club and at various teas and club fetes.

I don't know how it happened, but in some way old Moneybags Yelnik heard of the situation and appeared suddenly one evening at the residence of Miss Elain's parents. At the time his train from New York arrived. Patience and I were strolling along the shore of the lake in the moonlight. Fit came, and when we turned to the Elain home, some time after 10 o'clock, we found the catkins hunting old fellow tramping up and down the veranda, smoking furiously and stroke-ing his white whiskers in a manner that boded no good for us.

He never spoke to me, never acknowledged my presence by so much as a stare. Fact is, he utterly ignored me, and I'll admit that hurt my pride, and found him! He simply took Patience by the arm and marched her indoors, and next morning they went to New York before I had a chance to say farewell. But I was at the station, and as the train pulled out the dear girl called, "Goodbye, Fred! Don't worry. It's all right."

And then her father slammed the window and scowled as if he would like to bite me in half.

During the ensuing six months I worked as hard as I could, but never did I write to Patience, although I sent messages to her in Marion Elain's letters and heard from her no word then through the same medium, so I wasn't really cut off, you see. I came back to town about the middle of September, and a week later Miss Elain arrived at the Yelnik home in New Jersey to make a visit. But, of course, old Moneybags wouldn't allow me to see Patience, and naturally I had too much sense to call, but the deprivation was hard in more ways than one, as you will understand presently.

A month dragged by, and the time was approaching for Marion's visit to be concluded, when one Saturday afternoon I went aboard a ferryboat bound for Jersey City, whither I was to take train for the town where Patience lived, and on the boat for the first time in three months, I met Mr. Yelnik. He was feeling particularly amiable, probably because he had managed to "freeze out" some business rival in one of his great schemes, and he approached me, saying with a grim smile:

"How do you do sir?"

"I'm well."

"Haven't seen you lately out at the house," he continued sarcastically. "No, and you're not likely to," I replied, with emphasis. How long this conversation might have continued, I don't know, but at that moment we passed in midstream close by a ferryboat steaming from Jersey City to New York, and one of the passengers on it, a girl we both knew, waved her hand to me, and I called out:

"Wait there! I'll be over at once!"

Then the boats had swept by each other, and I turned to look at Mr. Yelnik. He was almost livid with rage, and he trembled as with a chill.

"You villain," he said threateningly. "So this is how you see each other. By heavens, I'll make you pay for this. I suppose you had arranged an elopement," he exclaimed, getting more and more excited. And he didn't become calm when I told him his surmise was true.

There were few passengers aboard, and Patience's father had the sense to speak in low tones to avoid a scene, but it was awful the way he swore he would put me in prison for life and shoot me dead if I ever so much as dared to look at his daughter again. Of course he didn't get off the boat at Jersey City. He staid close to me, and of course I came back to New York to meet the dear girl. But alas and alack! When we reached the middle of the river again and met the other boat, bound this time for Jersey City, old Yelnik fairly trembled for joy and shouted:

"There she is! I could recognize that hat and coat anywhere. So you see, she won't elope with you, you miserable, sneaking, hound, you young villain, you abductor!"

My heart sank within me as he spoke, for looking quickly at the passing craft, I saw her frightened half to death as she realized our plot had been discovered, but in deep desperation I shouted:

"Wait for me in Jersey City!"

She nodded, and then we were gone again. Fifteen minutes elapsed before our boat left the New York Ferry slip, and during that time Mr. Yelnik chuckled and slapped his knees and acted like a wild lunatic, he was so overjoyed.

"Yes, wait for me in Jersey City!" he mimicked. "Oh, she'll wait! don't you be afraid! she'll wait, but for me and not for you, and let me tell you one thing, sir—as soon as I can get a warrant you'll be locked up and in heaven's name, I'll see you in Sing Sing before I'm done with you!"

He went on in this fashion till we crossed the North river again and had come to a dead stop about 100 feet from the Jersey City Ferry slip, blocked by a fleet of canalboats that were lazily crawling up the stream against the tide. I looked across them to the boat she had come over on. It was blocked inside of the slip, and horror of horrors, there she stood on the deck ready to cross the river once more, having totally misunderstood the message I shouted.

A tugboat, waiting to get down stream, slowly approached, and came to a dead stop so close that I could have stepped aboard her. Mr. Yelnik had walked to the other side of our dock, feeling safe so long as I was there and afloat. Like a flash I saw a chance to escape and called to the pilot of the tug:

"Want a job?"

"That's my watermelon," he replied. Instantly I cleared our rail and leaped to the towboat, shouting:

"Shear off, quick! Shear off!"

Bad Blood Is a Good Thing

to be rid of, because bad blood is the breeding place of disfiguring and dangerous diseases. Is your blood bad? It is if you are plagued by pimples or bothered by boils, if your skin is blotched by eruptions or your body eaten by sores and ulcers. You can have good blood, which is pure blood, if you want it. You can be rid of pimples, boils, blotches, sores and ulcers. How? By the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

It is the radical remedy for all diseases originating in the blood. Read the evidence:

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla was recommended to me by my physician as a blood purifier. When I began taking it I had boils all over my body. One bottle cured me."—BONNER CLARK, Wesson, Miss.

"After six years' suffering from blood poison, I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and although I have used only three bottles of this great medicine, the sores have nearly all disappeared."—A. A. MANNING, Houston, Texas.

"You bet I will!" the pilot responded heartily. "Bully for you, young fellow. I ain't been married long myself."

In less time almost than it takes to tell I was had come along the other ferryboat, and the dear girl was aboard with me, and we were speeding down toward the bay. When we were quite out of reach, the pilot asked:

"Now where do you want to go?"

"Anywhere in New Jersey, so we can be married without stopping for a license—say to Atlantic Highlands or Long Branch or anywhere."

"You dear old goose!" exclaimed my betrothed. "Why, we can't get there under two hours, and by that time, I will have telegraphed all over the coast to arrest us on sight!"

"Good Lord!" I groaned. "What'll we do? I haven't thought of that!"

"Why, just let's sail up the Kill von Kull river to Bayonne and land in 15 minutes," she replied in a businesslike manner. "I'll never doubt your plan if you go ashore so close, but it's all New Jersey, and in ten minutes more we can find a minister and be m-m-married," she concluded, whispering and blushing.

And we did so and took the first train back to New York and telegraphed for our hotel to Mr. Yelnik that we would be glad to have him call on us with his wife that evening.

Since then we have been told that when the old gentleman reached home that afternoon he almost had an attack of apoplexy, for when he glanced from the veranda steps the front door was opened by his daughter Patience, who confessed everything—how she and I had never been really in love, but how Marion had become engaged to me that summer and we simply had to be married clandestinely because Mr. Yelnik finally succeeded in prejudicing Mr. and Mrs. Elain against me so that they refused to sanction a wedding.—Coffin Moody in Chicago Record.

"This is a straight story," said a grocery clerk, whose veracity has never been impeached. "It happened in our store. A little boy came into our George street store on Monday, and waited for someone to notice him. He carried a sheet of writing paper in his hand, at which he glanced from time to time. One of the idle clerks came to him finally, and the boy, reading from his paper, announced in a sing-song voice: 'My mother wants 10 pounds of rice, 15 pounds of sugar, 12 pounds of oatmeal, 20 pounds of—'

"Hold on!" interrupted the clerk. "Not so fast. Suppose you give me the paper, and I'll fill out the order."

But the boy insisted on calling off the articles himself. Two other clerks were pressed into service, and the three men proceeded to do up the various packages as the boy called them off. He interrupted the clerk: 'Not so fast. Suppose you give me the paper, and I'll fill out the order.'

The clerks had the counter stacked with packages, when the boy wound up with 15 pounds of flour. One of the clerks called out the price, and the boy continued in his sing-song voice: 'And how much money does my mother have to pay for her groceries?' One of the clerks counted up the total, and announced it as $18.73. The boy made a note of it and started out. 'Come back here, where are you going?' cried the clerks in chorus. 'Why,' said the boy, as he made for the door, 'that's just me! rhythmic lesson for Monday. I have the know-it or I'll get licked.'

I have been using Pond's Extract in my practice for twenty years. I frequently have the experience you mention of druggists insisting they can put up as good as yours. I don't believe it. I use Pond's Extract a great deal as an antiseptic in combination with glycerine and carbolic acid. I think it far superior to any antiseptic known. F. G. FLOURNOY, M. D.

Man in a Dismaying Mood
At Magistrate Dumble's Police Court reception yesterday morning Edward Daly, a young fellow, pleaded guilty to a charge of being drunk and disorderly. It appeared that the prisoner when drunk, had a row with his brother, and took his revenge by breaking with a heavy stone a door and window of his mother's house on Aylmer street. In default of paying a fine of $10, he went to goal for ten days.

How to Cure All Skin Diseases
Simply apply "Swayne's Ointment." No internal medicine required. Cures tetter, eczema, itch, all eruptions on the face, hands, nose, &c., leaving the skin clear, white and healthy. It is a great healing and curative power as possessed by no other remedy. Ask your druggist for Swayne's Ointment. Lyman, Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents. Avoid substitutes.

Effects of a Dog Bite
Mr. Samuel Ferguson, County Councillor of Cavan, and for many years Reeve of that township, while in the yards of the Oriental Hotel some three weeks ago, was bitten by a dog belonging to the proprietor. It was thought that Mr. Ferguson would lose his leg, but we are pleased to state that he is rapidly recovering.

One for Us
It is exceedingly gratifying to know that the Morning Times is now recognized as one of the foremost newspapers in Eastern Ontario. That great enterprise—the C.P.R.—whose managers are amongst the cleverest men on earth to-day, judging from their past record in connection with their great railway, has selected the Morning Times in which their official notices are to appear. We publish elsewhere a notice to shareholders which speaks for itself.

New Fad Coming
A new bicycle fad which promises to become almost universal has been introduced in the East. The fad consists of attaching a paper whirligig to handlebars of the machine, and when the machine is in motion the swiftly revolving novelty makes a very pretty appearance. Bicycle clubs have been equipped with these whirligigs, and where they have colors in various shades they make an attractive display for club runs.

Mr. Bradburn's Enterprise
Last Saturday Mr. Graham, foreman for Mr. T. Bradburn, of Peterborough, while fixing his building, the St. Lawrence hall, in Port Hope, kindly conducted us through the structure which they are rigging up in first class modern style for a hotel, and when completed will be a credit to the town, the people of which should encourage Mr. Bradburn in this grand and expensive undertaking. —Port Hope Guide.

Piles! Piles! Itching Piles!
Symptoms: Moisture intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form which often bleed and ulcerate and become very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Lyman Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents.

Postal Progress
Sixty-eight years ago, when the postal rate for the transmission of one letter was 25 cents for 400 miles, a former postmaster reports that he had at different times received as a just equivalent for this service, either two bushels of oats, five dozen eggs, four pounds of butter, three bushels of wheat, or one and a third pounds of common wool. It is easy to see how the progress which the postoffice has since made under government direction.

The Destructive Caterpillars
The men and boys employed by the Council in the work of gathering the caterpillar waste from the trees on the streets and in the parks have already gathered over 100,000 of them. Mr. James English superintends the work of destroying the twigs on which the eggs are deposited, which are burnt in the town furnace. What one reflects that the hatching of one nest of caterpillars means the bringing into life of 200 of these creatures, some idea can be formed of the pest from which the townspeople are being preserved. So far, 20,000,000 eggs have been destroyed. What an awful destruction of life Mr. English has accomplished! And what wholesome murders are the town councilors responsible for! It is perfectly appalling!

Two Views of Spring
Our Peterborough spring poet, who, like the present weather, is a little in advance of the season, sends along the following, written from two points of view:
Yes, it's nice, but don't forget That we'll have bad weather yet; In spite of robin, bluebird, or of Jay; Br-r-r-r! to think how it will bow! We're sure to have more snow Before spring weather comes along to stay!

There is gladness in the air, And the sky above is fair, Old Winter's folded up his tent and gone! I hope Spring's here to stay— Anyway, it's here to-day, So let's get out and frolic on the lawn!

Our Boys and Girls
It is a fact that success in life is not best measured by dollars and cents, but rather by the results which accrue from the cultivation of those forces and faculties with which nature has endowed the individual. Without a thorough general education along practical lines these forces are likely to remain dormant and the highest degree of success is not realized. Our own land offers the best facilities under the sun for the general education of our young people and in this respect the modern Business Training School plays a most important part. The Central Business College of Toronto seems to be a very recognized leader among such institutions judging from the very liberal patronage it enjoys and the excellent character of the work it is doing. The Spring Term in this School which continues from April 1st to June 30th is an opportune time for a short course of study along practical lines, and doubtless many young people of our province will avail themselves of the superior advantage this popular college offers. See ad. in this issue.

Fire Sale at Mason's
The recent fire at E. F. Mason & Co.'s has had the effect of slightly damaging by smoke the immense stock of groceries and provisions carried by this firm, and in order to facilitate renovation and make room for new goods, a clearing sale has been inaugurated and is now in full swing. Everything must go, and at almost your own price. Don't procrastinate! Call to-day!

Street Songsters
Editor Morning Times:
Dear Sir,—Returning from Sunday School in the afternoon I was amazed at the number of young men and boys loitering on the corners and in some places. All were chewing something, while numerous dark spots were on the sidewalk round about them. If the boys were not allowed to sun themselves as stated, they might find their way to the Sunday Schools. Yours obediently, TEACHER.

Editor Morning Times:
Dear Sir,—Can you suggest a means whereby loafers can be kept out of my shop doorway on Sunday? Every Monday morning the place has to be washed out because it is simply filthy. Yours truly,
A GEORGE STREET MERCHANT.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL
Mr. R. P. Gough, of Toronto, is in town.

Mr. Harry Nell was in Toronto yesterday.

Mr. Messum Bond, of Bobaygeon, was in town yesterday and favored the Times with a call.

Mrs. (Dr.) Cruikshanks, of San Marcial New Mexico, is visiting in town with her uncle, Mr. W. H. Hill.

Mr. Ward, an expert of the Canadian General Electric Company, is away compounding generators at the electric power-house of a neighboring city.

Ottawa Citizen: Mr. Harry Phelan of Peterborough, who has been here for some time in connection with the winding up of the Eagle estate, returned home on Saturday night.

Sir Arthur Hawkins, Bart., of London, England, spent yesterday in town and favored the Times with a visit. Sir Arthur stated that he and his party were on a trip through Canada to the coast, and would probably visit Alaska before returning to England.

—What's the matter with the Town Council? The members have not held one meeting this week!

—The Calcutt Brewing Company contemplate putting in a motor and prepping by electric power. It will then be electric beer.

—At St. Luke's school house last night, Mr. D. Spence delivered an interesting lecture on "The Temple." Vocal music was ably contributed by Miss Spence.

—The Chief of Police wishes the press to make public his intention to take no notice of anonymous complaints. If persons have grievances, they must not be afraid to sign their names to the letters they send him appraising him of that which they complain of.

—So rapidly has the work on the new St. Lawrence hotel been pushed that it will be completed and ready for opening on May 1st. Whether or not Mr. Bradburn has secured a manager, has not been learned, but it is reported that Mr. Benson, the well-known hotel-keeper, of Lindsay, will take the place. The Times hopes a report is true, as Mr. Benson is undoubtedly one of the best hotel managers between Toronto and Montreal. It is proposed that the magnificent new hotel be opened by a citizens' ball, and several gentlemen are already interested themselves in the matter. —Port Hope Times, March 17th.

Spring humors, boils, pimples, eruptions, &c., may be completely cured by purifying the blood with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

SHOT DEAD AT THE DOOR

A Man Well Known in Peterborough Instantly Killed

Mistaken for a Burglar—The Victim, J. M. Scribner, of Malvern

A deplorable shooting fatality occurred at Brockville on Tuesday, when J. M. Scribner, of Malvern, Victoria county, lost his life. It appears that Scribner, who was selling a bed-patient went, at about 11 o'clock, to the residence of Alex. Pear, who resides on what is known as the Station road, between Bellamy's station and North Augusta. Pear was awakened by the noise at the front door, which sounded as if some one was trying to effect an entrance. There were kicks on the door, and finally, when the family became thoroughly aroused, one of the sons, William Pear, went down and asked who was there. He got no answer, but the kicking continued, and then Pear, taking down a rifle, called out that unless the party outside gave his name he (Pear) would shoot.

FIRE THROUGH THE DOOR.
There was still no answer, whereupon Pear fired the heavy rifle through the door, and awaited developments. Nothing was heard further, and Pear, thinking, no doubt, that the prowler had been frightened away, retired to bed. Upon getting up after daylight broke the next morning, some of the members of the family opened the door and were horrified to find the dead body of a man lying across the threshold. The bullet fired by young Pear had ploughed its way clear through the body of the stranger, and his death must have been instantaneous. Investigation soon revealed the fact that the dead man was J. M. Scribner, who had been in the neighborhood for some weeks pushing the sale of a spritz-bulb, the patents for which he controlled.

UNABLE TO HEAR.
It is now supposed that he was looking for a job, or the night and being quite deaf, was unable to hear when asked his name and business by young Pear. The Pears had been bothered more or less for some time by tramps and burglars, and this had caused them to be very wary about admitting strangers to their home at night. The family were horror-stricken over the occurrence, and at once notified the authorities of what had taken place. Corner Vaux had been notified, and after concluding the inquest on the late William Field at Fairfield this afternoon, will proceed to North Augusta, accompanied by Chief Constable, where a coroner's inquest will be made into the tragic occurrence. The dead man spent four weeks in Brockville, leaving there two weeks ago. He was about 55 years old.

He spent about three months in Peterborough selling his patent here, and where he contracted some debt which he forgot to pay. While here he boarded at the C. P. R. hotel.

SAVED FROM DROWNING

Three Heroes Shared Their Lives to Rescue Their Brothers

A drowning accident is reported from Little Creek Government Camp, in Cavendish Township, and by the particulars which have been obtained it appears that a number of others narrowly escaped.

The young men by the name of Sweitzer were coming from Kelburn Lake to visit the Government Camp, when one of the brothers, by the name of Henry went through the ice at the mouth of Little Creek. His brothers tried to save him, but were unable to reach him. The remaining brother shrieked for help, when some of the Government men who were out in the woods rushed for the lake with boards and ropes, but the treacherous ice gave way and in moment four of them were struggling in the icy waters, getting under the ice and four times, but failing to reach the poor fellows whose aid they were going.

One had disappeared before the Government men had heard the call for help. The other got out and the rescue party had enough to do to save themselves, which they would not have done but for the great presence of mind and the noble determined efforts of all. Mr. Miller was especially heroic. He fought to the last to save a comrade from being carried by the waves of Wallace, who had a rope around Wallace's body, and with the assistance of several of the men pulled him along the ice to shore. They took him to the camp and after rubbing his benumbed limbs, and giving him hot drinks, brought him to.

MR. BURNHAM'S VIEWS

A Member of the Board of Trade Writes on Manhood Suffrage

The following letter from Mr. Hamilton Burnham appeared in yesterday's Globe, and will be read with interest by all Peterborians.
"Your Ottawa despatch in your issue of Thursday raises the question of manhood suffrage and restricted suffrage, leaning strongly to the latter, and quoting in support of restricted suffrage the opinions of both Conservatives and Liberals. The idle and vicious portion of the population have no proper interest in public affairs, and as a consequence are ready to sell their votes. This is painfully true, as a matter of fact, but it does not ensue as a necessary consequence and there is no other way out of the difficulty than restricting the suffrage. Your correspondent proposes $250 a year earned as the required qualification. Many a good and true man cannot get work to earn that amount in some years, and yet his opinion might be of immense value in public affairs. To deprive him of his vote because the idle and ignorant sell theirs is riding roughshod through the question, not solving it. But there is a solution, and an easy one. Enrich heavily those who bribe, and at one stroke you obliterate the small but pernicious section of the people who do nearly all the damage to public political morals. The idle and the ignorant take neither an active nor a passive interest in affairs beyond the price of their votes, and when those votes have no price the idle and ignorant will cease to vote. This is an admitted fact. Therefore do not restrict the franchise, but restrict the bribing. It is not the uneducated who do the mischief, but the educated ring of bondsmen. One may venture to say that if

Much in Little

Is especially true of Hood's Pills, for no medicine ever contained so great curative power in so small space. They are a whole medicine.

Hood's Pills

cheat, always ready, always efficient, always satisfactory; prevent a cold or fever, cure all liver ills, sick headache, jaundice, constipation, etc. The only Pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

a briber were liable to one year in prison at hard labor for corrupting the administration of public affairs by bribing voters there would soon be no more bribery or being bribed. As things are now, however, manhood franchise merely furnishes a larger field for corruption. Moreover, the whole system of electoral franchise is supposed to rest upon men as units of a State or nation, not upon them as representatives of property. Surely this is better, even if merely a supposition, than any other system. It makes for personal freedom above all other plans devised and only upon a universal basis can liberty ever be more than a name.

BIG FIRE IN TOWN

The Cottage of the Gas Works' Caretaker Burnt Out Last Night

Shortly after eleven o'clock last night a fire broke out in the cottage occupied by the caretaker of the gas works. The cottage is situated within five yards of the gas tank, which at the time of the outbreak contained about 12,000 cubic feet of gas; and its close proximity of course occasioned additional anxiety. Flames were seen issuing from the kitchen window by the occupant of a house near by, Mr. Hanna, and that gentleman roused Mr. Mackenzie, the caretaker, who had not long retired to bed. The alarm was given to the brigade, and there was a ready response. But the fire had got a firm hold, and practically the whole of the cottage's contents were sacrificed.

The trouble is supposed to have originated from the overheating of the stove pipes in the kitchen. Mr. Mackenzie has been in Peterborough about a year, and he had furnished his home very nicely. Although the furniture was insured, his loss is by no means adequately covered. In fact, he informed a Times representative that he had just about lost his little all. The building is the property of the Peterborough Light & Power Co.

Mrs. Mackenzie is away in Toronto on a visit.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 25, 1898

IMMEDIATE ACTION NECESSARY

The demand for the opening up of railway communication between Hudson's Bay and Toronto is arousing much attention in the Queen City. The projected James Bay Railway, as it is called, is of much importance to this district, as indeed it is to the whole of the province, while the route to be taken is of still greater importance to Peterborough and the surrounding localities. This is the point taken up by a correspondent, whose timely letter to the editor appears in another column. There are two routes suggested, and the question is—shall the existing Grand Trunk tracks be utilized and the connection with the north be made via Haliburton, or shall a parallel line to Sudbury be constructed, and to the west of this locality, of course? The latter proposal, it will readily be seen, by those who are acquainted with the geography of Ontario, would practically shut out the eastern part of the province from participation in the manifest advantages to be derived from the carrying out of some such scheme as is proposed; while the securing of the Haliburton route would be a great coup.

What course, then, should be pursued by those who are anxious for the development of this district? The advice the Times has to offer in this matter is that action should be taken in the direction suggested by our correspondent. We look for guidance in these matters to our Board of Trade, the members of which have constituted themselves the guardians of our commercial interests. Let that body, therefore, call a meeting to discuss this important question without delay. The Board of Trade has served many useful purposes since it was called into existence, but there is still plenty of work remaining for it to accomplish. In his excess of zeal our correspondent "Look Alive" does an injustice when he says the Board of Trade has of late developed a tendency to be behindhand. The Board has already decided to call a meeting to back up the town in the policy pursued by the council in connection with the new Electric Railway to Lakefield, has thus evidenced its keen desire for the business welfare of the county.

We venture to think, therefore, that the executive will see the advisability of the Board of Trade being called together to consider the matter. If that public body can only stir up the neighboring districts to take concerted action, there is a chance of making a strong claim for the serious consideration of this proposal to select the Haliburton route to the Bay.

An exchange asks, "Has spring come to stay?" Well, we should smile—or rather we shouldn't—if it hadn't.

The bill introduced by Mr. (or Mrs.) Charlton dealing with Sunday newspapers has just received its quietus.

The most bloodthirsty of the jingo correspondents admits that the Spanish Government did not have a hand in that explosive deal.

If the fire in town at midnight on Wednesday had got at the gas tank, there would in all probability have been quite a few mains (got Maine) blown up.

A few of our politicians should spend an hour or two reading over Great Britain's colonial history, and ruminate upon the swift chutes of men who imagined themselves to be the entire proposition.

Caterpillars may be crawling creatures, but if allowed to gang their own gait they fast become a nuisance. Townspeople are grateful to the Councilors who have issued the crawlers' death warrant.

Like ordinary mortals, the Templars have their little differences. Down in Hamilton they have been brewing a storm—and not in a tea-cup, apparently. There were elements of strong spirits, which had to be diluted.

A friend dropped into our office the other day and during the conversation remarked, "your office is as hot as an oven." Our "devil" heard the remark and answered, "Well, it should ought to be; ain't this where we make our daily bread?"

Party papers seem to be the necessary evil in Canada, but their methods are not necessary. The ordinary gentleman does not say any harsh things about either Mr. Hardy or Mr. Whitney, nor does he abuse either of them in private. Why should a newspaper be less honorable, generous and gentlemanly than the ordinary reader?

The Japanese are fast becoming Occidentalized. Now they are using Canadian butter and paying thirty cents a pound for it. The first shipment from this country has been received at Kobe. Another has been sent to Yokohama, and altogether the Japanese market seems to be a good thing.

When a man leaves our party and goes to the other side he is a traitor, and we always felt there was a subtle something about him. But when a man leaves the other side and comes over to us, then he is a man of great moral courage, and we always felt that he had sterling stuff in him.

The Hamilton Spectator and the Hon. J. M. Gibson are an interesting study. The Spec would like to see the Hon. Jay Hem on the bench, and Hon. J. M. Gibson would like to see the editor of that great family journal in the dock. And Mr. Gibson also opines that if justice were not so entirely leaden-heeled he would get his wish first.

SALISBURY HAS NO INTENTION OF RESIGNING THE PREMIERSHIP

LONDON, March 24.—The Foreign Office has issued a statement to the effect that there is no truth whatever in the statement made by the Daily Chronicle to-day, that the long Cabinet Council on Monday was called to consider an intimation from the Marquis of Salisbury of his desire, acting under medical advice, to resign the Premiership and the Foreign Secretaryship. The Marquis of Salisbury, it is announced, is very much stronger, in better health, and starts for the Riviera on Saturday.

KEENE LIME-JUICE CLUB

The members of the Lime Juice Club as usual assembled in their hall on Saturday night, and appeared to be in a very excitable state and brim full of business. President Decackey, who is always punctual in opening on time, called the meeting to order just as the village clock struck seven. After searching his pockets he ascertained that he had left his tobacco in Joe's cow stable. He, in a very courteous manner, intimated to the members that it would be a great obligation to him if some kind-hearted brother would favor him with a chew of tobacco. Minney Whale Jones at once handed him a ten cent plug, which Decackey in short order stored away in his left cheek. Minney Whale Jones with a deep sigh and a very askeance glance at Decackey, took his seat. Decackey now informed the members that the meeting was open for the transaction of business and he trusted that no time would be wasted, as a great deal of business had to be gone through. Minney Whale Jones was now called on for a speech. After laying aside his gold headed cane he at once commenced as follows: "Brethren, for some time past it has been the wish of this club that I give a speech and undoubtedly it would grieve my heart to disappoint you to-night, so here it goes: I had occasion one evening during the present week to call on Mrs. Roberts' son and as I was wending my way home through the mud at the hour of midnight the thought struck me that it would be a good scheme for the members of this club to construct an electric railroad from Jones to Mothers' Corners, as I am informed from reliable authority that a club is to be organized there in the near future."

Rinker Jack now shouted out: "I approve of the scheme and would suggest that the road be extended to Zion, as undoubtedly through time a club will be organized there. It will also be a great convenience to the residents of that place, for instance, if any of them is sick or troubled with a sore throat, how comfortable and how quickly they could reach the doctor."

Noah McNeven bounded to his feet and told Rinker that he understood his reasons for taking such an interest in the Zion people. I do not at all approve of any such route but I feel convinced that it would be a great convenience to many if the road was constructed to the north of the village.

Minney Whale now became very fidgety and declared that it was unjust and not at all gentlemanly to interrupt a fellow when delivering a speech, and he therefore wished it to be distinctly understood that he had the floor and would not tolerate any more such interruptions.

Noah now told Minney Whale to not get too gay or he would be called down too quick. Minney Whale made a grab at Noah and caught him by the left ear, led him to the door, and helped him down the steps by a swifter from the toe of his boot.

Just as Minney Whale was about to continue his speech Decackey rose to his feet and informed the members that it was time to close and he would as Whittier Youreux and Lightfoot Cronk to sing the closing hymn, all to join in the chorus. The hymn was well rendered and just as Decackey was about to declare the meeting closed he had occasion to sneeze. You can better imagine than I can describe the mess of tobacco which that sneeze sent showering through the hall. Decackey made a quiet sneak out at the back door and took a bee line for Joe's, no doubt feeling better after being relieved of Minney Whale Jones' ten cent plug. The members will again meet on Sunday night and don't you forget it.

The languor so common at this season is due to impoverished blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures it by enriching the blood.

HOW LITTLE IT COSTS

How little it costs, if we give it a thought, to make happy some heart each day—use one kind word, or a tender smile, as we go on our way. A look will suffice to clear the cloud from a neighbor's face, and the press of a hand in sympathy a sorrowful tear efface.

One walks in sunlight, another goes all wearily in the shade; one trends a path that is fair and smooth, another must pay to raid. It costs so little, I wonder why we give it so little thought—A smile, kind word, a glance, a touch—What magic with them is wrought!

THE END OF THE STORY

By Elizabeth A. Moore

The editor pro tem. of the County Journal sat gloomily in his office, rowding heavily and biting viciously at his mustache. Things stood in this way. The editor in chief had been called hastily away, leaving Hugh Elliott in charge, and as that young man was ambitious, this had been much to his delight. Before leaving the editor had placed before Hugh the matter to be used in the next issue, including the conclusion of a story begun the previous week. This story it was which had proved the snare to Hugh.

On looking over it he discovered to his dismay, that the final pages were missing. He had looked for them anxiously, but in vain—hence the confusion about the desk. The story could be left unfinished, neither could he be it upon himself to substitute another. Suddenly he saw a gleam of light, and good natured smile lit upon his face.

"Ha, the country's saved!" he exclaimed. "I'll write and end to the unfinished thing myself." Brushing aside the cluttering papers, he placed what there was of the "hang-d thing" before him.

He laughed to himself as he over too sure sense of the ridiculous caught a humor of the situation.

Evidently the perennials in the story were approaching a crisis. The characters who seemed to be the most prominent were a tall, dark man and a short light one: a beautiful young lady and a peculiar personage named Nemo King, who seemed to be treated by all with exceedingly familiarity.

Hugh pondered over the situation and vainly endeavored to find the natural ending of it all. He had not read the first part, and consoled himself by hoping that very few others had. It occurred to him to read it now, but as luck would have it, a copy of the last issue was not at hand, and he did not take the trouble to look one up, thinking, gloomily, that quite likely it wouldn't be any help if he had it, and then, too, he thought longingly of the club grounds.

Things went swimmingly now. Each character made several high-sounding remarks and went off the stage. The beautiful young lady had a pathetic interview with the light man, in which they resolved to part. The tall, dark man, who was no doubt the villain, as villains were always dark in stories (as Hugh reasoned), and, of course, no story was complete without one, made some malicious remarks about retribution and vengeance, and bowed himself off with all the smiles and grace that accomplished villains are supposed to possess. Then Nemo King sang a touching song and ended the whole thing with a general remark on the vanity of life, and the story closed, leaving the heroine in a swoon.

The manuscript, thus artificially completed, was handed in with the other materials for the next issue of the Journal, and then Hugh put the desk in order, and, much elated by his success as an author, started for the club grounds.

The paper came out on time with every department up to its usual standard of excellence. Hugh read his part production with great delight and was congratulating himself on having so successfully "gotten out of the hole," as he expressed it, when the unexpected happened in that peculiar way it has of doing.

The unexpected in this case came in the shape of a young lady, who walked into the office the day after the paper came out and demanded of Mr. Elliott to see the editor.

Hugh was not accustomed to the sight of young ladies; neither was he accustomed to such a peculiar mingling of chills and apprehension and thrills of admiration as he experienced when this particular young lady appeared on the scene.

She was a sweet-looking girl, in a dainty toilet of pink that suited her brown eyes and hair to perfection. But, in these same brown eyes was an ominous look that called into existence the chills of apprehension which he was also forced to acknowledge.

"I regret to say the editor is out of town," replied Hugh, courteously, and most truthfully.

"Indeed, and may I ask who is taking his place?"

Here the chills of apprehension rose high in the ascendant, as the "coming event" cast its shadows before.

"I have the honor," he answered, wishing heartily all the honor there was in it belonged to anybody else.

"Then it is you I have to thank for so altering the story published yesterday that even its author can scarcely recognize it. May I ask if you consider your alterations an improvement?"

This was, then, as he had guessed, the author of that unfinished story.

"I must explain," he said. "You see, the last pages of the manuscript were missing. Unfortunately, I had not read the first part of the story, being so rushed" (with tennis, though it was not necessary to explain that), "and so had to guess at the ending. I am exceedingly sorry about it, but it could not be left unfinished, and as the end could not be found there was nothing else to do. Any amends that can be made will be done most gladly, I assure you."

"You are very kind. What amends do you propose?"

"Well," said Hugh, with a desperate attempt to defend his course, "you know how frequently the most popular writers nowadays end their stories tragically. As I have had no experience in that line, I thought I would probably come nearer right to follow their lead, having no idea of the correct ending. But, to speak of the story itself, was not the light man the hero, and the dark one the villain—that is, the offending party?"

"Certainly not. The light man was only the brother of the heroine, and there was no villain, as you call it, in the story. The dark man was her betrothed. And as to it being the fashion for stories to end and, I believe in love stories ending the right way."

"Oh, so do I," Hugh hastened to say. "And I sincerely regret my mistake. But surely I did not do wrong to let the character Nemo King—wasn't it?"—make the concluding remarks? From the part he played throughout I judged he would be likely to do something to the point at the end."

"Oh, did you? Well, he was a tea dog."

"Great Caesar!" exclaimed Hugh, and then that irrepressible sense of humor asserted itself, and he burst into a ringing laugh.

"Oh, I do beg your pardon. I am sure I'm heartily sorry for my part in this thing," he said with such an honest penitent sound in his voice that she could not believe him. "And if there is any reparation I can make, believe me, it shall be done. Shall I explain the next issue, or will you not send the lost sheets if you have them?"

"Indeed, I would be only too happy to serve you in any way."

"No," she answered stiffly, moving toward the door. "I'm sure you have done quite enough. I will not give you any further trouble about it. Good morning."

"But, indeed," he said, anxiously, "it would be a pleasure to do anything you wish, if you will only command me."

She did not answer, and Hugh opened the door for her, wretchedly conscious of a feeling of utter incapacity to cope with the situation.

The Health of the Hair

is indicated by its condition. When the natural secretions decrease; when the hair becomes dry, splits at the ends and comes out in combing; when the gloss disappears and the hair becomes gray or faded, the ill health of the hair is indicated. The success of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is due to the fact that it restores the hair-producing organs to their natural vigor. It encourages and promotes the secretions of the hair follicles, and thus gray or faded hair regains its original color, new growth begins, and lost lustre is restored.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for fifteen years. It causes the hair to keep its natural color and is a positive cure for baldness."—T. B. WEYANT, Weyant, Pa.

The hair is the quiet of the skin. It is the hair that keeps the skin cool and moist, and it is the hair that keeps the skin from becoming dry and cracked.

Get More and You Get Less

Why is it every sarsaparilla which tries to sell itself, ranges itself against Ayer's as the standard? Why is it that all have to offer extra inducements—bigger bottles, fancy wrappers, cheaper price—anything, everything, but the one inducement of quality?

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

has never been equaled by any cheap imitation of it, and quality tells, just as blood tells.

It is the Standard.

"I have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla for more than twenty-five years, and have never heard anything but words of praise from my customers; not a single complaint has ever reached me. A preparation must possess great merit to maintain such a reputation. I believe your sarsaparilla to be the best blood purifier that has ever been introduced to the general public. I often hear other manufacturers say that it is 'as good as Ayer's,' but no one ever yet heard it said that Ayer's was 'as good' as any other kind. They always set Ayer's up as the standard of excellence."—S. F. BOWEN, Duluth, Minn.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 26, 1898

PRESS CENSORSHIP

Many persons disgusted with the license recklessly indulged by sensational journals have allowed themselves to entertain the idea of a public censorship of the press. Of course no such idea would ever gain acceptance in this country, but it is worth while to notice its operation elsewhere. The Government at Madrid has already begun to restrict or prohibit the publication of dispatches about military preparations and the situation in Cuba, and everybody will immediately interpret this as a sign of weakness. It will be thought that the government is not so much afraid of lies as it is afraid of the truth.

This is what a censorship generally comes to—the publication only of what the Government wants published, irrespective of what is proper for public information. A Government that is compelled to resort to this is always afraid of its public, or else has designs that it wishes to conceal because it knows the public would oppose them. On the other hand, a Government that has and deserves to have the confidence of those it represents has no reason for concealment and need not fear that falsehood will prevail over the truth.

Sensational journalism in the United States has caused a good deal of discomfort, the world over, while it has disturbed and excited the thoughtless and increased the embarrassment of those in responsible authority. But it has done no permanent harm. The great body of the American people soon came to recognize its absurdities and ceased to give it attention, and the nation has gone about its duty untroubled by it. The very contest between the press and the dignified reserve that has been maintained by the administration at Washington has contributed to the latter's strength and to the general discredit of the former. Had any attempt been made to restrain the publication of even the most reckless lies it would only have given them a fictitious importance and excited a feeling of distrust.

The liberty of the press, however it may be abused, can safely be left to the restraining influence of public opinion. Truth will always assert itself in the long run, and it is never helped by force even if force could be so applied as to suppress only falsehood and to give the truth a free field. At least this is the one safe rule to be observed. The point of view of Madrid is different from Canada's but there is nothing in Spanish history to suggest that journalism is under a censorship is any improvement upon even our worst examples of a free press, and they are happy but few.

The Senate should dismember that Yukon deal.

To a certain extent what are known as "circles of influence" are really a kind of political rings.

There are as many turning points in the various political crises as there are in a lawyer's bill of costs.

An ardent admirer of one of our town councillors who figured rather prominently lately has determined to name his baby son after him.

We stated in yesterday's Times that Spain claims the continental nations have a sympathetic feeling for her. It remains to be seen, however, whether they'll feel for her in the manner Quakers do—in their pockets.

There is a great outcry on the part of United States raisers of young trees against the Canadian bill prohibiting all importation of such stock. No doubt it is a loss to them. But American citizens should be the last to complain when other people legislate in their own interests.

A patriotic American lawyer has offered to draw wills free of charge for all members of the local militia company in case it is called to the front to fight Spain. Is not this the first instance during the present crisis of a patriot whose patriotism moved him to dispense with his fees.

The Galt Reporter fears Mr. John Charlton is too good for this country. He will, the editor is afraid, be compelled to his himself back to his native land, and leave Canada to its fate—and the newspapers. Which, the Times thinks, is as comfortin' a reflection as anything outside of Mrs. Camp's drop of something 'ot can be.

The Ottawa Free Press has rebuked the Ottawa Citizen. The latter said that Mr. Tarte swore to a certain thing, but the Press explains that he merely stated it. The Citizen wants to know where the difference is. Isn't a public man's statement as reliable as his sworn testimony? Things have come to a pretty pass if it is not.

A Hint to Dairywomen. A cheesemaker of Seymour makes the suggestion that the dairymen of this district might form a combination this season for the purpose of making shipments direct to the buyers in England, and thus do away with the whole-sale and middle-men. He says a representative could be sent to England to make arrangements with dealers, and shipments might be made fortnightly. Twenty-five factories might be induced to enter into a combination of this kind.

THE LADIES APPRECIATE THE BLESSING

A Great Discovery Peculiar to Diamond Dyes

As stated in previous newspaper articles it is an impossibility to dye cotton or any mixed goods a fast and durable color with a dye prepared for wool goods. Fast Diamond Dyes for Cotton and Mixed Goods are amongst the most important discoveries of the day. These special dyes for cotton and mixed goods have been given to the ladies only after the most severe and crucial tests which proved them to be far ahead of all other cotton dyes. These cotton dyes are perfectly fast to light and soap and water; of no other dyes is this true.

Fast Diamond Dyes for Cotton and Mixed Goods should be used by all carpet makers, and by those who dye rugs for mats and rugs. At the country fairs, all prize winners for rugs, mats and carpets owe their success to Diamond Dyes. When you are buying dyes take no substitutes from any dealer; ask for and insist upon getting the "Diamond" every time.

COULD DO NO WORK. "Large sores broke out on my body, head and limbs, and also on my hands, so that I could not do any work, and my hair came out. My trouble was called eczema. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. When I had taken several bottles the sores and itching disappeared and I was cured." Mrs. J. G. Brown, Brantford, Ont.

HOOD'S PILLS are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla. Cure all liver ills.

AN ASTONISHING AND MARVELLOUS CURE

Paine's Celery Compound Saves a Life After Doctors and Hospitals Fail

The Man's Limbs Were Lifeless and Useless and He Could Not Stand Alone—A

Most Critical Case of Nervous Prostration and Extreme Weakness—Had Little Hope of Being Cured

Mr. Deschamps Says: "After the Use of Six Bottles of Paine's Celery Compound I Am a Cured Man"

THE GREAT SPRING MEDICINE MAKES PEOPLE WELL

At the present time there are many thousands of men and women in Canada who are suffering much the same as did Mr. T. Deschamps, of 248 Atwater Avenue, Point St. Charles, Montreal. Such sufferers may now rest assured that the same medicine that made Mr. Deschamps a well man will bestow the same gift—good health—to others.

Mr. Deschamps' marvellous cure by the use of Paine's Celery Compound, after failures of doctors and hospitals is already well known to many hundreds in St. Gabriel ward, Montreal.

Mr. Ranton called town. The Rev. A. H. Ranton is evidently stirring up things in Belleville. The Intelligence of the Bird says: "Thinking, no doubt, that last evening would conclude Mr. Ranton's series of meetings in Belleville, the people flocked to the Bridge street church in large numbers, and before eight o'clock there was room for no more inside."

Police Magistrate Flint was in the audience and asked permission to speak. He said the city was not as immoral as the writer would lead people to believe, and in so far as the hotel incident was concerned, it was greatly overdrawn. It was not in a hotel the affair took place. In another part of the paper Mayor Johnston publishes a lengthy letter referring to Mr. Ranton, concluding with the following: "I ask, on behalf of the people of Belleville, that the Rev. Mr. Ranton shall furnish the name of the hotel and the evidence upon which such an allegation, affecting the fame of our fair city, is based. If it is true, and proved before me, I shall shut the hotel up and have the proprietor arrested and punished. I do not, however, believe that any hotel proprietor in Belleville would be guilty of such a crime as is charged. I respectfully request Mr. Ranton not to repeat such a charge against Belleville in any other place until it is proved to be true. I believe it is a foul libel upon this city, and that Mr. Ranton has been imposed upon by some lover of sensation."

A measure was passed at the last session of the Legislature with a view to substituting district for county jails. There is no doubt that the county jails are much too costly for the number of prisoners. How would it do for the counties of Victoria, Peterborough and Northumberland to send all their prisoners to one goal, and use the other two as homes for the aged and infirm of the three counties. None these counties have homes for the poor, and this would provide ample accommodation for all purposes without any expense.—Bobaygeon Independent.

for the cured man has never ceased to sing the praises of the remedy that restored him to health. Mr. Deschamps writes as follows:

"Having been a great sufferer for four years from nervousness and weakness, and having been completely cured by Paine's Celery Compound after failures with all other means, I desire to make the following statement: 'I became so bad from nervousness and nervous prostration that I was unable to sleep or assist myself in any way. My limbs were numb and useless, and for a long time I was not able to stand alone. I was under the care of several doctors in Ottawa city, but their treatment did not benefit my condition. After coming to Montreal I was a patient in the Western Hospital, but after three months treatment I left there no better. I thank Heaven that I was advised to use Paine's Celery Compound. This great medicine commenced to do its good work from the time I used the first bottle, and now, after having used six bottles, I am a cured man."

Change in the Law. Some people are not yet aware that a change has been made in the law relative to actions for damages against municipal corporations on account of accidents due to defective slippery sidewalks, or improperly protected culverts and ditches, etc. Hereafter such actions will be held before a judge without a jury, and unless it can be shown that the official of the municipality were negligent, the decision will go against the plaintiff.

Methodists Insist on a Straight Prohibition Vote

A Strong Delegation see the Government—Sir Wilfrid Laurier Explains His Stand on the Question

OTTAWA, March 25.

A representative delegation from the Methodist Church waited on the premier this morning to urge that the government submit the prohibition plebiscite free from any other question. Sir Wilfrid, Hon. Sidney Fisher, minister of agriculture, and Hon. Mr. Fielding, minister of finance, were the cabinet ministers present, and the Rev. Dr. Carman, general superintendent of the Methodist Church, Rev. Dr. Potts, of Toronto, Rev. Dr. Saunders, Rev. Jas. Elliott, Rev. David Winter, Rev. George McRitchie, Senator Aiken, Mr. Jos. Skinner, and Mr. J. T. Moore, of Toronto, composed the delegation.

Rev. Dr. Carman explained the organization of the church and its stand on the question of the plebiscite. He said he knew it was no trifling matter, and that he was there to reiterate and emphasize the view of the general conference and people of the Methodist Church. The plebiscite vote should be taken on the prohibition question unhampered by any other consideration than whether the people favored or opposed prohibition. Any related question, if submitted, would be a hindrance in securing a straight expression of opinion on the question, he said, is now one of great political importance, and affects the people, their homes and their freedom. He read the statement of the Liberal policy in 1893, which declared in favor of a straight plebiscite, and also quoted Sir Wilfrid Laurier as saying that the prohibition question should not be submitted along with other questions. Dr. Carman said the church wants to get a clear, unprejudiced statement from the people. He said that the Montreal conference had endorsed Premier Laurier's remarks on the prohibition question and they expected him to stand by them.

What of the Finances?

He quoted Sir Leonard Tilley, Hon. Sir Alex. Gait, Hon. Geo. E. Foster, ex-finance ministers, who claimed they adopted prohibition. He was not prepared to say where the government would get the revenue, nor whether direct taxation would result. Questions of compensation to liquor men, of their rights as citizens, and other questions could be debated on paper, but the prohibitionists are prepared to debate these questions. Dr. Carman also gave as his own opinion, that if the country had direct taxation there would be better government and greater economy. He did not want a catch vote on the question, but wanted a straight and square expression of opinion.

Rev. Dr. Potts followed and pointed out that the Methodist church in the largest Protestant denomination in Canada. As a church the Methodists are divided politically, but the prohibition question they are practically a unit. They are prepared to take all responsibility for the revenue if the prohibitionists give a majority. To put any other question along with the prohibition question on the plebiscite ballot, would be, he said, a question whether the clergymen would not advise their people to leave the ballot alone. The church is prepared to support the government in favor of prohibition.

SOAP BUBBLES.

Their Color and Their Wonderful Thinness Determined.

The extreme thinness of the bubble is indeed wonderful. It is estimated that the film in some places is only one three-millionths of an inch in thickness. Probably few of us can conceive of such thinness. Let us express it in another way. The Old and New Testament contain some three million letters. Now one three-millionth is such a part of an inch as the first letter of the Bible is a part of the sum of all its letters.

The bubble, however, is not of equal thickness at all points, and it is for this reason that it has the various colors. For instance, wherever the film is orange-red it measures about three quadrillionths of an inch; where it is bluish eighty-one-millionths of an inch; and at a point where lemon-yellow is prominent, about twenty-one-millionths of an inch. Perhaps you wonder why the colors change from one part of the soap bubble to another. This is because the film of the soap-bubble evaporates and grows thinner, but unequally so at different portions. A greenish blue with a pale rusted spot near it indicates an extreme thinness, and at such a point the film is ready to give way at the least jar.

You will be glad to know the source of the beautiful colors. Everyone is delighted with them, even if not interested by the explanation of their origin. We may say that they come from the light. Light gives color to all objects, but not exactly as it does to the soap-bubble. White light from the sun can be broken into the seven colors which we have seen in the rainbow. In that instance the raindrops separate it into its parts. A glass prism will do the same as you may prove by looking through a glass prism from a hanging lamp. When the light reaches the surface of the soap-bubble a part is reflected from it, and we see images on its surface as if it were a curved mirror. Another portion of the light, however, enters the film and is separated so that a part of the seven colors are thrown into the bubble, and we can see them at various portions of the opposite surface. Another part of the light, after being broken by the film, is reflected by its inner surface back to our eyes, so that we see colors at the point where the light enters.—Jacob F. Butcher, in St. Nicholas.

Electricity Made at Home.

It has been discovered that if a steel knife and a silver fork are inserted in a large orange an electric current will be generated. If the end of the fork and the end of the knife sticking from the orange are connected with an electric measuring instrument, quite a perceptible current will be seen to pass. The same kind of a battery can be made by substituting a cucumber in place of the orange, in fact, any acid fruit can be used.

In order to make a voltaic pile it is only necessary to procure ten or more pieces of zinc about one inch square, the same number of pieces of copper, and a like number of pieces of paper. The paper should be thoroughly soaked in vinegar.

First, take a piece of zinc; on it place a piece of vinegar-soaked paper, then put on a piece of copper, then a piece of paper, then another zinc and then paper, and so on until all the pieces of zinc, copper and paper are used up. It is important that a piece of zinc should be on one end and a piece of copper on the other. After the pile is completed, again soak the whole slightly in vinegar, then clean it off on the outside.

If the forefinger of one hand is held against one end and the forefinger of the other hand is held on the other end of the pile, quite a perceptible current will be felt. If several persons clasp hands and the persons on each end of the line touch the voltaic pile, the current will flow through the bodies of all those in position.

Causes for Anxiety.

An eminent Oxford man was invited to dine with Jowett, master of Balliol, at the lodge. The butler, who helped him to take off his coat, sighed deeply. "I am sorry to hear that," said the guest. "I hope you have no cause for anxiety at home?"

"No, sir; it's nothing," answered the butler, "only the master invited twelve to dine this evening, sir, and you are the only one who has not come."

THE FIRE RECORD

Destruction of a Country House at North

Merino, the handsome country residence of the late Mr. James Wallis, situated on the boundary between Smith and North Monaghan townships, was destroyed by fire soon after three o'clock yesterday morning. The origin of the fire is a mystery. The alarm was raised, and the Peterborough brigade turned out, but when it was discovered that the blaze was considerably beyond the town limits they journeyed back to the fire hall. The members of the Wallis family are away. Mr. Charles Wallis is in British Columbia, while the Misses Wallis are believed to be in England. The farm was rented by Mr. James Booth, who occupied a portion of the house. All his furniture was destroyed, but some of that belonging to the owners of the property was saved. Mr. Wallis had insured the house for $10,000 and its contents for $1500. "Merino" was a fine old residence, upon which its owner had spent as much as $16,000.

THE END OF THE STORY

By Elizabeth A. Moore

He sat down in the editorial chair after she was gone and meditated on his sins.

"I was a regular brute," he said, fiercely, jumping up so violently that the dignified editorial chair went spinning around like a top.

But some way he must gain her forgiveness. He did not know her name, nor, in fact, anything about her except—well, nothing but that he hoped he would see her again, and then he would find a way.

The day of the tennis tournament came, and came gloriously. Hugh Elliott passed hither and thither at various cuts, and in the glory of a white duck suit, now wielding a racket instead of the editorial pen.

Just as the game was being called, and the places allotted, he caught sight of a dainty figure in white this time, which he recognized at once. It was his divinity of the brown eyes.

She was chatting with some of his friends, the Engles, and Tow Engle, the rascal, was hovering around her with all the assurance and gaiety of which he possessed such a generous share.

"Tom always was a lucky dog," said Hugh, angrily, while his wrath rose high against himself as he recalled the scene in the office.

Anyhow, here was a chance to show that there was at least one thing he could do well, and he vowed that he would make a brave fight on this occasion. Tom Engle also took his place on the field, and the fight was soon in earnest.

For two hours, with slight intermission, the battle raged. Hugh knew in his heart that he was playing superbly, and he felt, too, that the maiden in white was not totally oblivious to his fine strokes.

When the closing game was called Hugh found himself with Tom Engle as one of his opponents. The four players were well matched, and Hugh knew that his last game would be no trifling matter. To take it still more trying he observed that the little party with which Tom had been, including the brown-eyed girl, had approached their court to watch the game and the result.

When the prizes were awarded Hugh Elliott received the first gentleman's prize, a gold scarf pin in the shape of a ball and racquet, tied with the club colors.

Tom Engle was the first to congratulate Hugh on his victory, which he did without the slightest appearance of discontent.

"And now come meet my cousin," he said. "Nice girl. Going to be here the rest of the summer. Have been looking for you for two or three days to have you come around."

And Tom was leading him away, with the flush of victory still animating his face, when suddenly without any premonition, again those horrible chills of apprehension overtook him, but this time unaccompanied by any thrills of admiration.

For, entering the club grounds and heading straight for them, was Mr. Page, the editor-in-chief of the Journal, who, having just returned, was anxious to consult with Hugh as to his success, and rightly guessed this was the place to find him. Thus, just as the young man approached the ladies, he came up, and, knowing Tom well, was presented also.

"Mr. Page, ladies, and Mr. Elliott, the champion of the day, and my ruthless conqueror. My cousin, Miss Ruth Somers, and my sisters you already know."

Hugh bowed with mingled feelings of

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

The Merit of These Pills is Proved by the Fact That They Have Cured Hundreds of Cases after Doctors and Other Medicines had Failed.

A CRIPPLE FOR LIFE

No Doctors Said Concerning Richard B. Collins—He Spent Months in the Toronto Hospital without Any Benefit.

From the Echo, Winton, Ont.

The Echo presents to its readers the following plain statement of fact, with the simple comment that a medicine that can perform so remarkable a cure is invaluable, and it is no wonder that the aggregate of its sales throughout the country is enormous.

I, Richard B. Collins, hereby make the following statement, which can be confirmed by any number of witnesses in this section of the country. First began to complain about five years ago. I had been then working in a fish shanty, and was wet almost the whole time, summer and winter. I was then confined to the house for three months. This was my first attack, and on getting better I commenced work again, and continued at it until the next January, when I took a much worse attack. The doctors pronounced it rheumatism, and after treating me for that disease until about the first of May, they discovered that my trouble was disease of the hipjoint and advised me to go to an hospital. I went to Toronto and stayed in the hospital five weeks and then returned home. I, however, did not recover, and was compelled during the following summer to go back to the hospital, where I remained three months, getting worse all the time. I was told I could not be cured, and when I left was only able to walk by the aid of crutches. I then came home and was not there long before I was taken to my bed. I continued in this state until January following, when I was advised by several friends to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I took their advice, and before I had finished the fifth box I began to improve, and by the time I had completed a dozen boxes I was able to walk without crutches, and have never used them since. I was able to do light work in a short time, and in January last (1897) I commenced working in the woods, and have no trouble from the hip unless over-exerted. During the last three years I have spent $300.00 in doctors' bills and medicines, trying everything recommended, but without any good results until I took Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, to which I owe my restored condition, as the doctors gave up all hopes of ever seeing me out of bed alive and well. I may say that before I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills during my last attack, I put in many a night so bad that I never expected to be alive in the morning.

WEAK AND WASTING AWAY.

Mrs. Josephine Boucher, Ste. Anne de Beaupre, Que., says:—"For two years I was ill and apparently fading away. I lost weight and my complexion was of a pale waxy color. My nights were a long insomnia, haunted by horrible dreams when I did get sleep. My mother consulted a doctor who said my trouble was chlorosis—that is the blood was lacking in its essential elements, and he advised the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. His advice was followed and six weeks later I was fully restored to health."

pleasure, embarrassment and pride; but there was no hint of their late unpleasant meeting in the few words with which Ruth greeted him.

"I congratulate you on your victory Mr. Elliott," she said; "you played magnificently."

"Thank you, I am glad there is one thing I can do in a civilized manner," he answered with a significance which she only understood.

Others soon joined the group, and Mr. Page took the first opportunity to ask Hugh about the paper.

"I hope you had no trouble during my absence," he said.

"Not especially," replied Hugh, hesitatingly, and knowing full well that every word could not but be overheard by Miss Somers. "There were some few matters not quite as I had expected. You have seen the paper, of course?"

"Yes, and I am glad you got it out on time. Everything seemed to be up to the usual mark. There was, however, just one thing that somewhat surprised me. That was the story concluded from last week. It struck me as being—well, rather involved toward the end."

"I regret that it was," replied Hugh, "and I am to blame for that. Unfortunately there had to be slight alteration toward the end on account of an accident; that is, some of the concluding pages were missing."

"Missing!" exclaimed Mr. Page. "You don't say so. Well, how did you manage it?"

"Oh, I played author myself," answered Hugh, with a grim smile. "I

THE AGONY OF SCIATICA.

Mr. Ronald McCormack, of St. George, P. E. I., an influential, well-to-do farmer, says:—"About fifteen months ago I took a heavy cold and as a result sciatica settled in my hip and leg, and for three months I could do nothing. I suffered intense pain and could get no rest, and at times I was fairly doubled up with agony. After trying some other remedies without getting any benefit I decided to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial. I bought four boxes, and before they were all gone I then got six boxes more and before they were all used the pains which had caused me such intense agony for months were all gone, and I was again enjoying the blessing of good health. I take much pleasure in endorsing Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

IN A DECLINE.

Mrs. W. Goodwin, Argyle Sound, N. S., says:—"After the birth of my first child I was in poor health and unable to recover my strength. I had a severe pain in my left side and lung, which almost made it impossible for me to breathe. I had a bad cough day and night, and was troubled with night sweats, and on awaking found myself very weak. My complexion was sallow, and my appetite entirely gone. All my friends believed me in a decline. Our family physician attending me for a long time but I got no better. Then a friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Acting on this advice I bought a supply, and continued their use until my health was fully restored. I am sincere in saying that I believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life."

AFTER EFFECTS OF LAGRIFFE.

Miss Langford, an estimable young lady living near Camilla, Ont., is another of those who has been brought from death's door to health by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. To a reporter of the Orangeville Banner, Miss Langford told the following story:—"I had a gripe in the spring of 1894. I did not seem to get over the effects of the attack, and as the summer progressed became weak and listless. Any kind of work became a burden to me. After pumping a pail of water from the well, I would have to stand and hold my hands over my heart for a moment or so, it would flutter so violently. I could not go upstairs without difficulty, and towards the last would have to rest on the steps, and when I got to the top lie down until I could recover my breath. I became a mere skeleton, my cheeks were like wax and my lips colorless. I lost all appetite and my meals often went untasted. Medicine seemed to have no effect upon me. I was getting weaker all the time, and at last began to give up hope of recovery. My parents were of course in great distress, and I knew by the looks and actions of friends who called to see me, that they thought I was doomed to an early death. Shortly after this an aunt of mine, Mrs. Wm. Henderson, of Toronto, came to visit at our place. My condition troubled her very much and she insisted on my trying Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. To please her I consented, but with little hope of any good result. The effect, however, was wonderful and a pleasing surprise to me. I soon began to feel more cheerful and seemed to feel stronger. Then my appetite began to improve and the color return to my cheeks and lips. From that hour I steadily gained strength, and was soon enjoying my former excellent health, and I am sincere in expressing my belief that to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do I owe my recovery."

A Depressing Season

Winter is the most trying season of the year, so far as health is concerned. Confinement indoors, and over-heated and impure air makes even ordinarily strong people feel dull, languid, "out of sorts" and generally run down.

What you need is a tonic to aid nature in regaining lost energy. April is the month of all months when a tonic is of most service.

is the greatest of all tonic medicines. Through their use ailing, tired and depressed men, women and children, are made bright, active and strong.

But you must get the Genuine

Do not let any dealer persuade you to take something which he says is "just the same as," or "just as good as" Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. All imitations are worthless—many of them dangerous to health. The genuine pills are put up in boxes, the wrapper around which bears the full trade mark "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," printed with red ink on white paper. Inside the wrapper will be found Dr. Williams' directions for use.

If your dealer does not keep Dr. Williams' Pink Pills they will be sent by mail post paid, at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"Oh, 'ther Noemo!"
"And the heroine swooning, and the villain—that was what you called my hero, I believe—"

"In this story I'm thinking of, the villain and the lover are one, so one ending would be enough."

"It seems to be rather involved, too." "Then let me untangle it Ruth, and since my miserable ending was published, let us live out your happy one together. That is the use I want to make of it, and that will be far better than having it published."

Here the villain looked so much in earnest that only one ending seemed at all possible, and Ruth answered, trying to speak very innocently and failing diametrically.

"Of course it's a pity not to make some use of it. If you think my ending better than yours—"

"Never mind finishing your sentence, either, Ruth," said Hugh, gladly. "I do think yours better than mine. But if I had never written mine, perhaps we could never have lived years as now we shall. So you see there is something to be said for two endings."

"But I don't know," began Ruth, with one feeble effort to resist the irresistible.

"Oh, never mind, I do. I'm a full-fledged editor now, and am supposed to know all about love stories."

"Whether you do or not," added Ruth sweetly.
But here the villain takes matters in his own hands and the story becomes hopelessly involved.—(Chicago Record.)

A Hearty Send Off

Mr. Reginald Dixon and his sister, Miss Maggie Dixon, left Peterborough by the 2.48 express yesterday afternoon for Maple Creek, Assiniboia. Before his departure, he was the recipient of the following address from the Grace Church Sunday school, with which he had been so long and so usefully associated:

To J. R. H. Dixon, Esq.:
Dear Friend and Fellow Worker,—It is with regret we, as Sabbath School, learn of your intention to leave Peterborough and thus sever your connection with us. As your associates in Sabbath school work we cannot let you go without some expression of our good will and appreciation of your services.

Since our school was organized you have been true and faithful, first as Librarian, then as secretary, while your genial manner and kindly disposition towards both scholar and teacher endeared you to all.

Knowing that our loss will be others' gain, we bid you God's speed and trust your usefulness may be doubled in your new home. May Heaven's richest blessings rest on you as our prayer, and though distant from us ever remember there is One ever nigh at hand to guide you in the way of all truth and righteousness. Signed on behalf of teachers and officers of Grace Church S. S., Peterborough.

WM. MIGHT.

The George Street Church Epworth League and his Sunday School class also presented Mr. Dixon with tokens of their esteem and good-will.

Bicycle Notes

Cheap bicycle bearings are works of friction.

A few lady bicyclists were observed practicing on the Market Square yesterday afternoon.

It is better by far to go down into your cockpit and hand over enough to hire a mount than to lend your bicycle to anybody.

The unpleasant tendency experienced by novices to ride straight into objects which they are most anxious to avoid, is defined by a mechanical authority as the "hypnotic influence of concentrated attention, rendering the movements incoördinate, so that the rider becomes the victim of perverted reflexes of purposeless effort, and the subject of an optional delusion." Every student of cycle phenomena should be glad to know this. Hitherto, this unfortunate thing, has been termed the "blind wobble."

A Severe Punishment

In view of the frequent meetings, during the past month by our Town Council, we have conjured up before our vision the following little scene.

Magistrate Dumble frowned austere as he gazed upon the trembling culprit.

"The poor wretch stood like one in a trance, as with fearful eyes he watched the magistrate's face for a sign of mercy. He found none."

Mr. Dumble proceeded: After careful consideration, I have come to the conclusion that you are guilty. I regret that I am unable to discover any extenuating circumstances. The sentence of the Court is that you serve six months on the Peterborough Town Council.

The poor prisoner fainting as Constables Adams and McIntyre escorted him from Court.

The Chief of Police smiled a smile, while Mr. Recorder Armstrong looked exceedingly grave.

Bridgenorth Notes

—The hum of the saw mill is again heard in the village.

—Mr. Isaac Mann left for the Prairie Province on Tuesday last.

—A quartette from the Indian Village was noticed at the pageant the other day. We presume another poor fellow has been made happy!

—Mr. A. Jobe is having his store thoroughly overhauled and renovated this week. When completed it will be very much improved in appearance.

—One day last week Mr. Elias Pearson, of Smith, had the pleasure of enjoying the luxury of a washing bath. He was crossing Deer Bay on foot, and when at some distance from the shore the ice gave way precipitating him into the water. With considerable difficulty he scrambled out and made his way to shore from where he soon reached home not feeling much the worse for his adventure.

A Fine Engine

The first of the 25 new engines purchased by the C. P. R. from the Baldwin works, arrived at Havelock on Thursday under the direction of an expert. The trip was extremely satisfactory. The engine is a peculiarly built machine, inasmuch as its boiler is set several feet higher, the eight driving wheels being only four feet six inches high, much smaller than the ordinary, and the cab is built over the boiler. As the engine is constructed, it is impossible for the fireman and driver to be crushed to death between the tender and engine in a head-on collision and it is an extremely easy matter to jump in case of an impending collision. The engine did not develop a high rate of speed, but showed an ability to carry 700 tons of freight, nearly a hundred tons in excess of any other freight engine.

The C. W. A. Meet

The Canadian Wheelmen says: "How about a grand picnic outing for the annual meet, something on the style of the Canoe Association's annual. How about it for the Provincial for '98, Peterborough? How about it, Ottawa?"

"Peterborough is first in the field as regards picnic claims for the meet before the members of the Association, and already they have solicited the votes and influence of every affiliated club. Their red, white and blue seal circular is a striking one and their jolly greeting, 'Here we are again,' tends to predispose the recipient in their favor."

Extra Terrestrial

The Canadian Pacific Railway have issued an announcement bearing the statement that after April 1st, they will carry smothered stock for breeding purposes at half rates, when certificates of registration are produced by the shipper. Shipments will be permitted without anyone in charge, on condition that the shipper exempts the company from all liability likely to result therefrom. Farmers about Peterboro who are sending stock to the Northwest will be pleased to learn of this action on the part of the railway company.

MEETING AT PORT HOPE

Bungling, Perhaps Criminal Mismanagement, Talked of

Report of Mr. E. Saunders, Who Held an Investigation—A Severe Arrangement—Supposed to Have Capital of $100,000 the Concern Started With $4,900 and Withdrew Most of That During the First Year

(Special to the Times)

Port Hope, March 26.—The creditors of the Midland Trust Company are in session at Port Hope to-day. The meeting became very warm when the report of Mr. E. Saunders, of Toronto, the investigating barrister, which showed gross, if not criminal mismanagement and juggling with the books, was read, and it was shown that there was practically no method by which the creditors could obtain satisfaction or reimbursement.

We extract the following from Mr. Saunders' report:

There were, speaking generally, three important questions to be enquired into, and the most important of these were: For what amount, if any, were the heirs of the late Thomas Patterson, of Boston, entitled to rank as creditors of the Midland Trust Co., and the enquiry on this branch of the case was complete. Every important item in the accounts between the Executors and the Trust Company was carefully examined, and each item was traced through all the books—first, the receipt with the Midland Trust Co., and lastly its deposit by the latter in the Bank of Toronto to the credit of the Midland Trust Company, the same being entered in the general account of said company.

The Midland Trust Co. was in reality the Midland Banking Co., under another name, the change in name having been adopted simply for the purpose of overcoming certain provisions of the Bank Act—the Midland Banking Co. being unincorporated, and the only partners in it were Stanley and John Patterson. It ought also to be said, in order that erroneous impressions may be removed from the minds of the creditors of the Midland Trust Co., that the publicly advertised capital of the Midland Banking Co. of $100,000 was entirely mythical.

According to the sworn testimony given by John Patterson, the combined capital of himself and his brother Stanley, including all private property of the latter, never exceeded $30,000 and was a matter of fact, when the Midland Trust Company was formed in 1886, it is expressly provided in the partnership deed that the capital stock of said company should be $20,000, and of this amount only about $3,800 was cash, and John Patterson appeared to be unable to state upon his examination with any degree of accuracy how the balance of the $20,000 was made up.

The evidence shows that for years there has been drawn out of the funds of the Trust Company annually in salaries and other expenses an amount nearly equal to the actual cash capital of the concern at the time of the formation of said Trust Company. Notwithstanding the receipt of over $100,000 in the years 1890-91, on the Thomas Patterson estate, of which $60,000 has ever since been used in the general business of the Trust Company, the said company were obliged in the month of April, 1893, to discontinue their own paper at the bank, which they made up the account to the extent of nearly $31,000.

In this case also there was found the same tendency as is manifested in other similar cases—an over-valuation of the assets for the purpose of striking a balance. A balance sheet for a recent year was produced and carefully examined. The promissory notes had been classified, and in one case an item of nearly $10,000 had been entered, enquiry revealed the fact that out of this large amount, reckoning from the date at which the balance sheet had been made up to the date of the assignment, extending over a period of three years, only about $400 had been collected, and that in the assignee's statement prepared for the creditors the balance was very properly trebled as of no value, showing that even $1,000 would have been an over-valuation. The fact is, that instead of entering these notes at nearly $10,000 and trying to provide for over-valuation by the fiction of a "Contingent Fund" at least $1,000 of this amount should have been written off as absolutely bad, and had the business been in a more flourishing condition, this method of disposing of these bad notes would probably have been adopted.

I do not wish to innuendate that in making up these statements Mr. John Patterson pursued any other course than that which he regarded as strictly right and proper, but the plan adopted would not commend itself to an independent business man, and the results have not been satisfactory. This batch of promissory notes will convey to the creditors some idea of the losses incurred in this business.

Seekers after gold are often disappointed. Seekers after health take Hunt's Bitters and find it meets every expectation.

THE SOUTH PERTH CASE

HEARING OF THE APPEAL AGAINST THE RETURN OF MR. MONTETH, CONSERVATIVE.

(Special to the Times.)

TORONTO, March 25.

The South Perth election appeal was argued before Mr. Justice McLennan this morning. County Judge Barron, on the record, awarded the seat to Nelson Monteith, the Conservative candidate, raising his majority from five to six.

The appeal is by Mr. W. C. Moscrop, the Liberal candidate, Mr. George Frame, the Independent candidate, who was distanced by the straight party men, but evidently no kick coming for he was not represented by counsel this morning. Mr. John Idlington, Q.C., Stratford, appeared for Mr. Moscrop, who was an interested spectator of the proceedings. Mr. Wallace Nesbitt and Mr. F. H. Thompson, of Mitchell, represented Mr. Monteith.

It is hard to tell exactly how many votes are in dispute because Mr. Moscrop has made what Mr. Nesbitt calls a "politic appeal"—that is it covers everything.

There are thirty-seven ballots, to which the objections are explicit, but in the appeal a rider is added which impugns all the ballots that were discussed by the returning officer or the county judge. Of the thirty-seven votes, there are twenty-one which have been marked on the left hand in the number compartment. Of these nine were allowed for Moscrop and twelve for Monteith.

About the remaining sixteen a singular dispute arises. The ballot was divided into three compartments, containing the names of the candidates, arranged alphabetically—Frame first, Monteith second, Moscrop third. By some jarring of the press or slipping of the type several of these ballots duplicated the name of Monteith, placing it exactly on the line between his own compartment and Mr. Frame's. There were sixteen of these ballots allowed for Monteith by the County Judge. In four of them the cross was placed exactly on the line with the misplaced name. In the remaining twelve the cross was marked very near the misplaced name, but distinctly inside the compartment allotted to Mr. Frame, the County Judge holding that the intention of all the voters to mark their ballots for Monteith was apparent.

The batch of twenty-one ballots marked to the left hand in the number compartment was first argued. Mr. Idlington argued that none of these votes should have been allowed, because it was in direct opposition to the statute to mark the cross on the wrong side of the ballot.

In reply, Mr. Nesbitt cited similar ballots which were held good by Mr. Justice Osler in the West Huron appeal. If the court held that these ballots were not good, it would result in a paradox that such a ballot was valid in West Huron, but not in South Perth. In these ballots Mr. Nesbitt argued that there was neither uncertainty as to the voters' intention nor probability of subsequent identification.

Another little grist of nine votes came up in the comprehensive rider. They had a cross marked opposite the name of one candidate, and a slanting single mark opposite the other. Six of these were allowed by the County Judge for Monteith and three for Moscrop. The preponderance being for the Conservative, Mr. Idlington objected to their acceptance. Judge McLennan, however, allowed the whole.

The sixteen votes with the misplaced name were next discussed, and, after counsel on both sides practically left it to the Judge's eye.

In two polling sub-divisions a general objection was taken by both sides to the wrongly numbered ballots. The Judge held that such ballots were valid.

OXFORD WON IT

THE RACE WAS A PROCESSION AND FINALLY THE CAMBRIDGE BOAT FILLED WITH WATER.

(Special to the Times.)

PUNNEY, March 25.—Oxford won the fifty-fifth boat race between Oxford and Cambridge, rowed to-day from Punney to Mortlake, four and one-quarter miles. Oxford won the toss, and this practically assured the race, as the crew took advantage of the brisk wind. The day was overcast, with occasional fine rain and a cold east wind.

The crews got away at 3.48. Soon after the start, Cambridge was a quarter length ahead of the dark blues. One mile and a quarter from the start Oxford led by three lengths. One mile and three-quarters from the start Oxford was leading by four lengths. A little over two miles from the start Cambridge was pulling short, and at two miles and three-quarters the race had become a procession. Three miles from the start the dark blues were leading by five lengths, and at three and two-thirds miles her head was 45 seconds.

The Oxford crew crossed the line 12 lengths ahead. The Cambridge crew stopped off The Ship, at Mortlake, thoroughly exhausted, and with their boat full of water.

Oxford has won 32 out of 35 races, and has won 9 years in succession.

GARROW GETS IT

THE VOTE DECLARED A TIE AND THE RETURNING OFFICER WILL DO THE REST.

(Special to the Times.)

TORONTO, March 25.

Mr. Justice Osler handed out his judgment in the West Huron appeal this afternoon. Both the votes claimed by Mr. Garrow are allowed by the appeal judge.

This means a tie in West Huron, and consequently Mr. Garrow's victory through the returning officer's casting vote.

THE TIME FOR ACTION

Spanish Government Knows Americas Ultimatum

PRASE FOR THE PRESIDENT

Opinions of the British Press on the Cuban Situation

The Gravity of the Question Enormously Increased—The Time for Action Has Arrived, Says the Daily Chronicle—Spain's Responsibility Her Conciliatory Attitude

(Special to the Times.)

London, March 26.—The Times does not comment on the cable forecast of the report of the Maine court of enquiry, apparently awaiting the official announcement.

The Morning Post says: "The gravity of the Cuban question is enormously increased by the 'American' report; because, even if no distinct indictment of the Spanish Government is included, the reserve hitherto maintained will be abandoned and Spain will be backed by the 'American' papers with treachery and malice, while the 'American' people will be excited to fever point."

"Spain, however, has already borne so much that conflict may still be avoided, but if her object has only been to gain time, it may be that she is now in a position to adopt a more martial attitude."

PRASE FOR UNCLE SAM

The Daily Chronicle, after expressing a doubt whether the Spanish enquiry has been conducted as carefully as the "American" report of whose commission it says, is "in harmony" proceeds to review the principle aspects of the question. "As patience of the Washington Government," says the Daily Chronicle, "and the calm pacific policy of the President have been beyond all praise. Had the people of the United States been polled on the question, war would have been declared before now; not as has been falsely suggested, on account of financial and commercial interests, but on grounds of humanity, and because of the intolerable stretch of this open sore close to the borders of the great Republic. But it is evident that the time for action has arrived."

TIME FOR ACTION HAS COME

"President McKinley must take such steps as to challenge in the most direct way Spain's right to murder her evoked colonists any longer. If, in attempts to resist the provisioning of starving Cubans from 'American' ports, she is marked from any treachery to the 'American' warship, I despise all rumors it is quite certain that Spain will have no allies and the result will be the liberation of Cuba."

SPANISH RESPONSIBILITY

The Daily Telegraph says: "Supposing the 'American' report to be substantiated, there can be no question that Spain is primarily responsible, as any country would be, if a similar catastrophe occurred along its coast line."

"If the Spanish authorities were ignorant of the position of the submarine mine, their ignorance is culpable; if they were aware and omitted to warn their guests their position is still less defensible. The report adds fuel to the flame. If the task of diplomatists and statesmen was arduous before, it is ten times more difficult now."

The Daily Telegraph, discussing elsewhere the financial aspects of the case, says that if the situation should become more acute there would certainly be a big export of gold from this side.

SPAIN KNOWS THE ULTIMATUM

The Madrid correspondent of the Standard says: "The Ministerialists are making no secret that important communications have already passed between Washington and Madrid, acquainting the Spanish Government with the drift of the policy of Mr. McKinley is about to adopt, and which has been met with conciliatory but firm protest and representation on the part of Spain."

A BUSINESS-LIKE REPORT

The Pall Mall Gazette this afternoon says: "The report on the loss of the Maine promises to be a model of what such a document should be. The business of this board of enquiry was not to impute motives nor to find excuses, but to set forth the facts as learned by them. They have done so, and the President will appreciate much the same line of business-like report."

RIGHTS IN CUBA

New York, March 26.—The subject of cable from Madrid is in the World; I have carefully enquired among the numerous political parties, and I cannot find a single party, nor even a solitary candidate who will consent to the sacrifice of 'Spain's rights in Cuba.'"

Indeed, the candidates of all parties rival one another in their intensity of patriotism, and the willingness to fight, if necessary, to save Cuba for Spain.

SPAIN IS CONCILIATORY

The Government received last night full details of the report of the Spanish commission on the Maine catastrophe. It declares positively that the explosion was accidental. The Government want to the Palace and conferred with the Queen. Finally it was decided to cable to Marshal Blanco and send a copy of the report of the Spanish commission to Washington immediately. Spain thus wishes to give fresh proof of her conciliatory attitude.

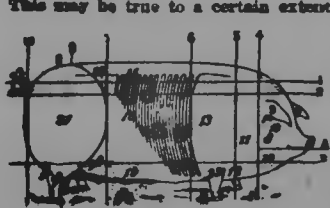

SCORING A HOG.

H. A. Jones, Sec'y International O. I. C. Record Association, Shows How With Figures and Explanations.

In the course of pure bred stock breeding comes many a new idea, which may be beneficial to the breeder. It is advocated to-day by many that there is more in feed than breed, and this same old adage will ever be handed down from generation to generation, without doubt, by those who do not, by means of education, understand the principles of stock breeding. In dealing with this subject, I shall not endeavor to go over the entire subject, but concentrate upon the one branch of the industry and deal only with the hog. There is presented here an outline cut of a hog, and I will endeavor to show before closing these papers, that the axiom "feed first and then feed," will ever be the guide to success. I realize full well there are many choice grade hogs in this country, that for one block will bring just as many dollars as the pure bred. This we all admit, but the facts go to prove the finest grade is valued only for pork, and the finest pure bred is valued least for pork. The grade, then, is never worth more than for pork, or its products, while the pure bred, no one can tell the value of as a breeder.

In the outset, I desire to say these papers will not be written in the interest of any particular breed of hogs, but any breed or breeds shown to any breed or breeds. This is a free country, and we all have our likes and dislikes, not only in grade hogs, but in pure bred as well. I propose also to show wherein we can improve our hogs, and the condition of our breeders—by adhering more closely to the principles underlying the breeding of pure breeds.

During the past half century much has been done to bring about desirable results in pure bred swine. Some prefer black, others red, spotted or white. While some prefer the heavy hog, others prefer the smaller or medium; but when the desired results are so varied for all agree that the hog that will make the greatest number of pounds of pork for the food consumed, in a period of six or seven months, and have sufficient bone to carry the carcass, is the most profitable for the general markets and the average farmer.

POINTS OF A HO

The following Roman figures denote the lines showing how to score a hog: A, 1-2-3-4-5, 7-8-9-10. Line A shows the head upon level running parallel with mouth. 1 shows upper and outside base line. 2 shows head and tail line. 3 shows lower side or upper of belly line. 4 shows neck and head line division. 5 shows neck and shoulder line division. 6 shows shoulder and side line division, and where to get heart girth. 7 shows side of hind line division, also shows centre of loin and flank. 8 front ham line. 9 rear ham line. 10 shows meat at dot on front of hock. All other figures are to denote the various divisions on the score card.

and I believe it is; but it is not conclusive. To illustrate: There are two brothers who have an equal amount of this world's goods—lands of equal value and improvement—and they make a break for assistance. One is a careful, painstaking, practical conservative man and devotes his energy to studying his business, investigates the causes of other's success, and applies his findings to profit in his own business. He breeds pure bred stock of all kinds, commencing with only a pair or trio, and in the course of time every year or two makes an addition to his herd, by exchange, or otherwise, of a good sire. He avoids promiscuous breeding and breeds for a purpose solely of obtaining the most profitable breed of stock he is able to get. He has at the end of the year a value he cannot count, while his dollars may be counted as many as his brother's.

The brother is a careful, easy-going, industrious, hard-working man, very conservative, and a little doubtful that he will not get as many dollars in immediate benefits as he is called upon to pay, and he pursues the policy, "let brother investigate and I'll reap the profit." He pursues that course and finds his investment worth no more in ten years than when he commenced, and is then forced to realize there are ever changing conditions beyond his control, and that he must wake up and hustle or he will soon be a back number. While his brother sowed and reaped abundance, he simply sowed and reaped his harvest year by year. His herds and flocks were the same each year, and he could see no very marked improvement. He had no outside calls, at good prices, for cows from his dairy, sows or stags from his pen, simply for the reason he grows only ordinary common stock.

Now, is this not a waste of one's capabilities? If not, what is it? Do you desire to improve your herds? Then investigate. Procure some good dams, of any of the pure breeds, and a good sire, any of the highest standard of excellence which your purse will allow you to get, and from some reliable breeder, who is not afraid to open his stock book and show you the record of the breeding of any particular animal, and who is not afraid to ship any of his choice breeding stock upon a written guarantee that the animal possesses a certain number of desirable points, and is of the breeding certified by the secretary of the Record Association, shown by certificate of registry, and of which there can be no doubt, and that satisfaction is then guaranteed to you by every member of the association, under which your animal received his record number.

Now come the points. What are they and how ascertained? Whatever breed of cattle, sheep or swine you desire to purchase, ask the breeder to send you the by-laws and rules of the association in which his animals are recorded, and then study out for yourself what the quality of the stock is which the breeder has to offer, and does offer you. Then require the breeder to certify the animal (sows or sows) a certain number of points, and to be placed as such, and satisfaction guaranteed to you and you will have no cause to regret the purchase. It is a reasonable thing. "Put up the bars, that the hogs can't get out." The various Record Associations offer you the same. Will you use them for your benefit? Then, in case you are not satisfied, your remedy is to appeal to the association where the animal is recorded, and the breeder is to satisfy any dissatisfaction he may cause.

In the foregoing, you have the fundamental points of pure bred swine as ascertained by the above said, as follows: Let him be: The person who controls the breeding.

HUMOR OF THE KLONDYKE.

Some incidents of Real Life That Lighten the Situation.

"I guess the old saying is true that variety is the spice of life," remarks Warner Mackintosh, looking up from his reading, "but it kind of strikes me that there is a little more of that kind of spice than is just exactly palatable in the newspaper reports from the Klondyke gold fields."

"I have been reading that there is little or no vacant mining land left there, and that there are plenty of rich claims for all comers; statements that the reports of the fabulous finds are grossly exaggerated and that the half has never been told of the riches of that new El Dorado; that crime and violence are rampant there, and that the people are open-handed, law-abiding and hospitable; that the winters are prolonged stretches of almost unbearable cold interspersed with terrible blizzards which only the strongest and hardiest can hope to survive, and that the climate, though cold, is extremely healthful, and that when one gets used to it the exceedingly low temperature is felt hardly more than a that only one man in a thousand can much milder degree of cold could be; that only one man in a thousand can justly hope to win a fortune there even at the risk and probable sacrifice of his health, and that after passing through the cold-seeker's dangers in the spring and healthier than at the beginning of the winter, ready to pick up the golden wealth which is his for the taking."

"I like variety in my newspaper reading as a general thing, but I'll have to confess that the Klondyke information that I have been acquiring of late is just a little too spicy for my taste."

His Identity.

"One day," said the returned Klondyke millionaire, "we found a poor fellow with a high, bulging brow, dead in the snow and frozen as stiff as a crowbar. The body was terribly emaciated from lack of food, and there were no papers or any other articles on his person to indicate his identity."

"His pockets did not contain a cent of money, but in them we found a description of a $10,000 summer cottage, a recipe for making ice-cream soda, a formula for curing goat, a newspaper clipping warning its readers against a dangerous counterfeit hundred-dollar bill, a description of an ancient Roman banquet, full directions for raising orchids, an advertisement of a Florida orange grove, a clipping describing a plutocrat's steam yacht, another about the management of a thoroughbred racing stable, a small pocket map of Sumatra, a price list of rare coins, instructions for detecting flaws in diamonds, a solemn warning against habitual over-eating, advice on wooing and winning a wealthy and beautiful young widow, and directions for the cure of a sunstroke. There was absolutely nothing on the body to show who or what he might have been, so we decided to call him an optimist, and let it go at that."

A Variety of Money.

"I understand that your husband returned from Klondyke last night, Mrs. Jurnagan," said the inquisitive villager. "Is he about the house now? I'd like to have a little talk with him regarding that region."

"I am sorry, Mr. Askington," replied the good woman, "but I am afraid you can't see him now. He is in bed upstairs, suffering from what the doctor calls nervous—or—prosperity. I believe it was."

"That's too bad," Mrs. Jurnagan! By the way, the report is in circulation that he brought all kinds of money home with him. Is that true?" "Well, I don't know that he brought all kinds of money, Mr. Askington, but he certainly brought several kinds. He fetched back two copper cents, a Chinese coin that he had used for a lucky piece, a Confederate bill which he had taken along to swap to the Indians, a few pieces of Esquimaux shell money, a bit of wampum, a lead nickel, and a poker chip. If he hasn't brought home all kinds of money, he has certainly returned with quite a variety."

Head.

The languorous quiet of Elysium was gently broken now and then by the clink of glasses and the pop of opening ambrosia bottles.

"That," Charles I. explained one who had been there long enough to have learned the ropes, "is his idea if he keeps up the gaiety he'll wake up with a head some morning."—Life.

ELECTRICITY AND CROPS

THE CURRENT HELPS THINGS TO GROW WITH GOOD RESULTS.

Frenchmen Know the Secret—Seeds, Flowers, Grapes, Strawberries and Vegetables Showing Extraordinary Vigor When Electricity is Applied.

It has long been known that the electricity in the atmosphere plays an important part in the stimulation of vegetable growth, but hitherto no practical use has been made of this knowledge.

The results recently obtained by some French scientists, who have been experimenting with the effects of electricity on plants indicate that a most valuable aid to agriculture has been discovered. A plant deprived of atmospheric electricity by covering it with a network of fine steel wires soon withers away and dies; when artificially stimulated by an electric current it blossoms far more vigor than in a normal condition.

With these data to work upon, the experimenters moistened seeds with water and then subjected them to the influence of an electric current. The seeds thus treated grew with far more vigor and came to maturity sooner than those not so treated. They even succeeded in making date plants grow, which is a very unusual thing to happen in France.

Pears, beans and maize grow with astonishing swiftness when treated with the powerful current of a Ruhmkorff coil and the yield was greater than ordinary. Experiments with batteries were not so successful when the current was passed through the earth, because of the difference in the resistance of the soil in various places to the passage of the current. The resulting crop was uneven in character, according as one particular section received more or less of the electric current. With the powerful electrical machines more satisfactory results were obtained. Strawberries in particular were ripened in a remarkably short time.

Electrical machines are far too expensive, however, for a farmer to use, and though all right in theory they are too costly in practice.

The new invention is called the geomagnet, and consists of an ordinary pole forty or fifty feet high, surmounted with a chevron of frise of copper spikes, designed to act as a collector of atmospheric electricity. This collector is insulated from the pole by a porcelain knob, and connects with a copper wire (also insulated from the pole), which transmits the current to a network of wires which are laid under the soil at a depth of about six feet. These wires are made of galvanized iron, and their cost is not large.

By the use of this apparatus the production on a given area has been increased 50 per cent. The grapes from vineyards in which the geomagnetism is used are richer in sugar and alcohol than ordinary grapes. Flowers have a stronger perfume also when stimulated in this manner.

The exact chemical action which the current has upon fruits and vegetables cannot be determined. It is only certain that such action takes place. Some hold that it acts by aiding the plants to assimilate the gases of the atmosphere, while others think that it favors the assimilation of certain mineral salts in the soil.

The experiment can be tried on any lawn or flower bed so long as the pole is away from the house. If too close it acts as a lightning conductor, but without giving any protection.

It is estimated that a geomagnet six feet high will enrich the soil to the same degree as ten times its cost in manure. At the present time a successful farmer has to be something of a chemist, and it now seems as though he will have to be an electrician, too.

A NEW CURE FOR ERYSIPELAS.

Colorless Liquid With an Extraordinary Name Dr. Marmorek Has Made.

It is reported that a Parisian physician, Marmorek by name, has discovered a new serum for the cure of erysipelas, purpura, fever and bronchial pneumonia. This recently discovered remedy has been given the name of "Colorless Liquid." It has been used at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, and is a thin, colorless liquid, resembling water in all most every detail. No word has come so far as to its success or whether any really definite cures have been made.

As a matter of fact, there is only a very small quantity of it in existence—little more than a tiny vialful, indeed, but this is sufficient to have aroused pretty nearly all Paris—that section of it it least which takes an interest in medical affairs and in the science of curing diseases—into making frequent inquiries regarding the discovery as of great practical importance. Dr. Marmorek says that the liquid is based on a serum with requests for a small quantity of the serum on the part of both physicians and sufferers, and he has been obliged to shut out the public and the medical fraternity for a time until he has prepared more of the precious liquid.

His reason for so acting is his remembrance of the time of the discovery of the antitoxin cure, when the patients, as besieged by anxious crowds demanding the new remedy and offering large sums of money for even a little of it. When the doctors then explained to them that it was impossible to give them what they asked for because there was no supply of it on hand, the crowd returned and upbraided the physician violently, calling them unhuman and brutes. Dr. Marmorek is anxious that such a scene shall not occur in connection with his discovery. In a month and a half Marmorek claims that he will have an ample supply and will meet all demands that may be made upon him.

Deadly Work of the New Bullet.

Sir Benjamin Baker, in a paper on "War and Engineering," calls attention to the devastation which the small-bore rifle effects in the human body. He says: "The magazine rifle bullet, though no larger in diameter than a lead pencil, does not simply perforate a bone, but 'the part is always pounded; fragments are frequently carried out through the wound of exit, which is commonly converted into a gaping orifice, the muscles are pulped, and, in fact, the limb mangled and damaged beyond repair.' It may not unreasonably be extended, therefore, that by supplying soldiers with a weapon which kills or maims for life everyone a bone of whose body is touched by a bullet even at a mile's distance, and further, by making victims and vanquished suffer equally, and the cost of killing a man to be incomparably greater than of old, engineering science has done more to make war unpopular than all the army tactics of the world will ever be able to do, however much they may endeavor to distract attention.

SOAP BUBBLES.

Their Color and Their Wonderful Thinness Determined.

The extreme thinness of the bubble is indeed wonderful. It is estimated that the film in some places is only one three-millionths of an inch in thickness. Probably few of us can conceive of such thinness. Let us express it in another way. The Old and New Testament contain some three million letters. Now one three-millionth is such a part of an inch as the first letter of the Bible is a part of the sum of all its letters.

The bubble, however, is not of equal thickness at all points, and it is for this reason that it has the various colors. For instance, wherever the film is thinnest it measures about three one-millionths of an inch; where it is blue, eighty one-millionths of an inch; and at a point where lemon-yellow is prominent, about twenty one-millionths of an inch. Perhaps you wonder why the colors change from one part of the soap bubble to another. This is because the film of the soap-bubble evaporates and grows thinner, but unevenly so, at different points. A greenish blue with a pale roseated spot near it indicates an extreme thinness, and at such a point the film is ready to give way at the least jar.

You will be glad to know the source of the beautiful colors. Everyone is delighted with them, even if not interested by the explanation of their origin. We may say that they come from the light, which gives color to all objects, but not exactly as it does to the soap bubble. White light from the sun can be broken into the seven colors which we have seen in the rainbow. In that the light is broken into its constituent parts, a glass prism will do the same, as you may prove by looking through a glass pendant from a hanging lamp. When the light reaches the surface of the soap-bubble a part is reflected from it, and we see images on its surface as if it were a curved mirror.

Another portion of the light, however, enters the film and is separated by that part of the seven colors which is reflected from it, and we see colors at various portions of the opposite surface. Another part of the light, after being broken by the film, is reflected by a thin surface back to our eyes, so that we see colors at the point where the light enters—Jacob F. Butcher, in St. Nicholas.

Electrically Made at Home.

It has been discovered that if a steel knife and a silver fork are inserted in a large orange an electric current will be generated. If the end of the fork and the end of the knife sticking from the orange are connected with an electric measuring instrument, quite a perceptible current will be seen to pass. The same kind of a battery can be made by substituting a cucumber in place of the orange, in fact, any acid fruit can be used.

In order to make a voltaic pile it is only necessary to procure ten or twelve pieces of zinc about one inch square, the same number of pieces of copper, and a like number of pieces of paper. The paper should be thoroughly soaked in vinegar.

First, take a piece of zinc; on it place a piece of vinegar-soaked paper; then put on a piece of copper, then a piece of paper, then another zinc and then another piece of paper until all the pieces of zinc, copper and paper are used up. It is important that a piece of zinc should be on one end and a piece of copper on the other. After the pile is completed, again soak the whole slightly in vinegar, then clean it off on the outside.

If the forefinger of one hand is held against one end and the forefinger of the other hand is held on the other end of the pile, quite a perceptible current will be felt. If several persons clasp hands and the persons on each end of the line touch the voltaic pile, the current will flow through the bodies of all those in position.

One definition of this word is "secret agents" which makes it very applicable to Cottams Seed. The skillful cook exercises a "secret agency." The same materials used by the average servant produce very different results under her mixing. So constant supervision by experienced bird-men accounts for better general results obtained from Cottams Seed.

NOTICE—"BART. CO. (Ld.) & CO. LONDON," as label. Contains manufacture, order a pattern, and separately—BREAD, 1 lb. PLAIN BREAD, 1 lb. BREAD, 1 lb. With COTTAMS SEED you get the best worth for 1 lb. Three times the value of any other seed. Sold everywhere. Read COTTAMS' "Hatched BREAD BOOK," 96 pages—post free 25c.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 28, 1898

IT

I was called "It." Try as I would

I could find no patron saint in the calendar who answered to that name, and there was really no excuse for "It," but the negligence of the Johnson family to christen its children. They bestirred themselves early only in the case of my older sister, who was named Maggie. Even

I, the youngest of a batch of five,

never knew the second child, a boy

by any other name than "Brother."

Then came "Sis," the third, and

"Babe," another boy, and finally I,

"the last of the Johnson brood." "It"

rang in my baby ears long before I knew what was meant. I suppose that being the real baby it would have caused confusion in the household,

where there was already a "Babe," and so they substituted "It," for that was my title by right of succession.

I never knew my mother. She died soon after I opened my blue eyes to the world. Perhaps if she had lived my nomenclature would not have been so slightly tattered. Maggie, the youngest, a quiet, faithful girl, took charge of us at mother's death. Father was a teamster and away all day from the little family, for whom he provided generously out of his meagre earnings. He, too, called me

"It" when he took me up in his lap and rubbed his harsh, stubble beard over my baby cheeks or pinched my little fists with his big, horny fingers. Maggie gave me a mother's care, as she did the other children, and I had really no trouble about my incomplete name until I went to school for the first time.

"Your name is what?" asked the teacher when my turn came in a long line stretching from the foot of her desk to the last bench in the room.

"It," I answered promptly.

"It," Johnson?" she repeated, with a doubting shake of the head. "Little girl, you must have forgotten your name."

"No," I gasped for a lump in my throat almost choked me. To be the first in the whole room who had any difficulty about her name was mortifying even to a little 6-year-old.

"Have you any brothers or sisters in this school?"

"Yes, my big brother is in No. 3."

"Go up stairs and bring him down had fix. You never had any other

name."

"But isn't your name 'Brother' and nothing else?"

"No, I've been christened James because."

"James?" I queried. "I thought that was father's name."

"And it's my name, too—James Johnson."

Then for the first time I learned that "Brother's" name was James, that

"Sis" had been christened Cordelia, and that "Babe," the infringer, was Andrew in the baptismal record. Only poor, little sighted me, was "It" and nothing more.

"Brother" made matters clear to the teacher, and she laughingly inscribed the name of "It" Johnson upon the big roll book of the school.

I passed through my school days as

"It." Then, tired of book learning, I went to work in a shoe factory. "Brother" was a teamster now, like father.

"Sis" was married and lived in the country. "Babe" had run away to enlist in the army, and there was nobody at home but father, and Maggie, and me, for James was boarding in another part of the city, where most of the hauling had to be done.

I hadn't been in the factory long when that old phrase "you're it" was revived on the vaudeville stage, and of course the young men about the place teased me by applying it to me, a real "It," an "It" from her birth to her 16th year.

"You're it," they shouted, as they came up with me in the street. "You-

re it!" said their mischievous eyes

I entered the shop and passed the foreman to go to my table. The foreman was strict and permitted no noisy conduct inside the factory. He was a serious looking man, with a young face, but the mien of one beyond his years. He called each girl by name as he parceled out the work and told her what to do. "Mollie! Rosina!

Gertie! Becky! Annie! You!" he said when my turn came.

"Her name is 'It,' said a saucy miss who stood close by.

The foreman shot a forbidding glance

at her, then looked rather pityingly upon me. "You," he repeated, "are sure these rams and make sure that they all tally with the simple." And

"you" I remained to Mr. Joe Parkinson, the foreman, for weeks and—months.

The factory hands still called me

"It." I was "It" at home to father and Maggie. But, somehow, there was nothing galling in it any more, as long as Mr. Parkinson refrained from using the family slight.

I had always been a frail young thing, though not ill, and the foreman gave me the lightest tasks. Otherwise he showed me no favoritism. I paid my fine when late the same as the rest, and if I made a blunder I paid for the damage. Withal, I felt sure that Mr. Joe Parkinson liked me the best of all, and my little heart craving affection and only too ready to give it, went out to him in the first flush of awakening womanhood.

He must have read it in my eyes, for his glance grew warm when he spoke to me, and his hands often lingered around mine as he placed the work in my outstretched arms.

The girls at my table were all friends,

but one, Scowlow, a silent antagonist, had sprung up from the first between Rosina Freold and me. Rosina was of Italian descent, a buxom, crimson-cheeked girl, with a well-poised, vain little head. She was of a quarrelsome and jealous disposition, fueled by the girls and relentlessly purposed by the young men with admirable gleamed impudent innuendoes in compliment to her beauty, and invitations to all the parties in the cheap dancing halls of the town. To all of these Rosina went, and often more than once a week was she finding for being tardy the morning after.

She stood her punishment with a saucy smile for she knew her beau of the evening would make good her financial loss.

Aware of Mr. Parkinson's hobby for promptness, I had been invariably on time. One night Maggie was taken ill.

I nursed her till daylight. Then I fell into a sound sleep at the foot of her bed and was awakened only by my sister's anxious cry that it was long past rising time. I hurried away with out a morsel of breakfast and reached the factory just three minutes late.

Mr. Parkinson stood at the desk, noting my time.

"My sister was ill all night," I explained, blushing to the roots of my hair. He must have read in my eyes the penitence expressed for having crossed him in his efforts to promote promptness.

"All right, little girl," he said with a kindly glance from his handsome brown eyes. "I'll forgive you this time."

As I turned to go to my place I saw Rosina at my elbow. She had heard the foreman's remark. An evil

Scrofula is Snake-Like

in its subtlety. It lies hidden for years in the ambush of the blood, and when it strikes it voids its venom alike on strength and beauty, disfiguring the one and undermining the other.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

is a specific for scrofula in its worst and most malignant forms. Scrofula is a blood disease. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a blood purifying medicine. Mineral medicines only drive scrofula below the surface. Dr. J. C. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a vegetable remedy and it eradicates the disease. There is no remedy for scrofula equal to Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"I was cured of a long-standing case of scrofula by Dr. J. C. Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The disease first manifested itself when I was a child, by breaking out in red blotches all over my body. I was not free from the trouble until I took several bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. That effected a permanent cure."—Mrs. E. H. Snyder, Lehigh, Pa.

The close of day, Becky and I were not more than half a block from the shop when Rosina and her noisy escorts came toward us from the middle of the street.

"There goes 'It'!" Joe Parkinson's "It" I'll pay de fine! There it goes! And the rudest of the quartet picked up a handful of mud and plastered my back with it. I turned to run back to the factory, when out of the darkness the arm of a man shot squarely across my assailant's face.

"The foreman knocked him down!" whispered the excited Becky. "I'm glad of it!" And we took to our heels and made good time in getting home.

As I crept into my bed that night the sweet thought that he had defended me kept me awake many hours. When I slipped into dreamland at last it was with his face bending over me, his lips whispering that he loved me, me—poor, nameless, insignificant "It."

Next morning I hurried to the factory long before the opening hour to thank him for his gallant defense. To my utter dismay a stranger was at his desk. I gave him my number and passed on. Soon the other girls arrived in groups of two and three. Their faces were grave, and they seemed to discuss with subdued voices a calamity.

"What has happened?" I gasped, filled with anxious foreboding. "Mr. Parkinson has been arrested," said Becky. "The blow he dealt the scoundrel who insulted me was more effective than he had meant. The fellow was lying unconscious at his home. It was even feared that his injuries would result in death. His two companions had sworn out a warrant against the foreman. Neither they nor Rosina made their appearance at the shop that day."

Even now I cannot bear to dwell on the miserable days that followed. Joe Parkinson languished in prison, while the victim of his gallantry slowly recovered. I went to him with a breaking heart. He stretched out his hands through the bars and drew me toward him until he kissed my forehead. I was a woman at last, and my cup of love and suffering was full.

"I can bear it all, little one!" he said manfully. "It was all for you!" He was acquitted at the trial. On the day of his release we were quietly married, and that night he left me to go to the far West and commence life again.

It did not take him long to get a start, and I soon joined him in the cozy little home he had prepared for me.

"You!" he cried as in the days of old. Only now he clasped me in his arms and kissed me. "Little wife!" he said. "Dear little wife!"

And I was "It" no longer.

Planet discoveries. Three more small planets were, it appears, discovered by M. Charlois of Nice, on December 31, making, if all recent announcements are verified, 20 discoveries for 1898, and a total of 429. Twenty years ago only 160 were known.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 29, 1898

CUT OUT OF WHOLE CLOTH

The Liberal organ, we are pleased to say, denies that the Liberals of Peterborough contemplate making a raid upon the Dominion Government offices in Peterborough. Our contemporary intimates that the story was "cut out of whole cloth."

We may say in reply that the Times is not in the habit of manufacturing news in this way. The information came from what we consider a reliable source, and we still believe it to be true.

Will our contemporary deny that no less than two distinct efforts were made by deputations to Ottawa to clear the way for Liberal office-seekers? If it is necessary we think we can name the man who was on these deputations. The Times is also armed with letters or copies of letters bearing on this subject, which, if published, would cause a flutter in certain quarters.

We are pleased to know that Mr. Stratton personally is free from having made any promises during the campaign just closed, but some of the party managers are not so guiltless.

We regard the "dead end" now being made by the Ottawa Liberals, headed by the Toronto Globe, as extremely significant. The Liberals of Peterborough are as anxious for office as their brethren elsewhere, and if Mr. Stratton can "hold them down" without causing a lot of internal trouble, he has a bigger "pull" with them than we give him credit for having.

By the way, has anybody ever said that spring lamb is man's meat?

March is glad it came in like a lamb, for it has needed all it swoll the last few days.

Some of the papers are asking for a straight vote on prohibition. Is this to offset the whiskey straight?

An Austrian mechanic has invented a means whereby he says he can see around the world. Possibly it's all in his eye.

That a tavern-keeper could want to render the town water more desirable as a drink is in itself a suspicious circumstance.

Naturally when they've got the dead wood on public corruption there's something rotten about the business.

It is so easy to give things away and so hard to discover after it is done that you could have put them to some good use yourself.

If Great Britain should join with the United States to fight Russia and Germany there is no doubt that blood would be thicker than water.

The axe may have to be laid to the root of political jobbery. It's apparent certain parties couldn't use it, even if Ottawa's hatchet did the trick.

Gum-chewing women will be glad to learn that, in the opinion of a prominent New York dentist, the habit is a healthful one for the teeth, though it may be bad for the digestion.

Mr. Stratton's paper says that there is not one word of truth in the rumor that the local Tory is about to lose his job. After all it may be that Mr. Stratton's own job is in danger.

The individual who knows it all is apt sometimes to make a trifling mistake, the latest faux pas of that wise one being overheard yesterday when he announced that the Earless of Warwick had a son.

The people in this county who grow or contemplate growing tobacco will be pleased to know that the Hon. Mr. Fisher is about to issue a special bulletin on the subject. Those desiring copies should apply to the Dominion Minister of Agriculture.

The Times, while not of the betting kind, is willing to wager a new spring hat with the Editor of its George-st. contemporary that room will be made in the near future for at least three good and true Liberals by the removal of Tory office holders.

Parliament has at length tired of Charlton's persistent Sabbatarianism, and has told him by a majority of 60 to 43, that it will have no more of his nonsense. (And now a Canadian may, on Monday read a paper printed in the United States on Saturday, and dated Sunday, without being sent to jail as an awful criminal.—Hamilton Spectator.)

The following extract from the Philadelphia Record is interesting reading: A Washington correspondent of the New York Herald gave yesterday a graphic description of the war feeling at the capital. After counting the enormous costs of war, he thus presents the net results: "Therefore, to sum up, we would have a war without glory, a national debt without any advantage, a pension list for a generation, an island we do want, a people with whom we have no ties of race, custom or faith." Nevertheless, the voice of the jingoes in the Senate and House, swelled by the clamorous throats of pension agents and dealers in army supplies, is still for war!

She Says:

"I Am Astonished at the Result, as My Trouble Was an Old and Chronic one"

The man or woman who does not use Paine's Celery Compound to banish the tortures and miseries of dyspepsia and indigestion at this season is certainly destined to go into the summer months a nervous, weakened, dependent and miserable wreck.

The galling bonds of dyspepsia reduce nerve force and power, promote heart difficulties, and the blood becomes stagnant and impure. Paine's Celery Compound works speedily a sure and permanent cure, builds up the body, and gives a store of health and strength that makes living a pleasure. Miss Lizzie Muir says:

Dear Sir:—For the benefit of sufferers I gladly give my experience with Paine's Celery Compound. After suffering from dyspepsia for fifteen years, and meeting with many failures with other medicines, I decided to use Paine's Celery Compound, having heard of its many cures by its use. The Compound, after I had used it for a time, produced miraculous results and banished all my troubles. From a condition of helplessness—being unable to sleep or eat—I now feel well and strong. I am astonished at the result, as my trouble was an old and chronic one. Yours faithfully, LIZZIE MUIR, Quyon, P.Q.

A BIG NATIONAL HIGHWAY

WHAT THE INTERCOLONIAL AND THE DRUMMOND COUNTY LINE WILL MAKE.

(Special to the Times.)

OTTAWA, March 28. Another meeting of the Drummond County Railway Enquiry Committee was held to-day. Mr. Lister occupied the chair, and all the members of the committee were in attendance. Mr. Blair was present.

The first witness examined was Mr. Schreiber. He was taken in hand by Mr. Powell, who examined him at length in regard to his estimate of the cost of bringing the Drummond County Railway up to the standard of the Intercolonial. As the figures were, in some instances, taken from the reports of Mr. Macleod, it was decided to call the latter as a witness.

Mr. Schreiber also gave evidence in regard to the cost of rolling stock, and also in respect to his estimate of the increased earning powers of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. Mr. Schreiber said that more rolling stock would be required. The examination of Mr. Schreiber was then directed towards the extra traffic which would go by way of the Intercolonial once the extension had been made. The witness admitted that it would be difficult to catch very much traffic from the water route, but in his opinion there would be better chances of increasing the general traffic of the road from other roads at Montreal than there would be at Lewis.

For ocean going traffic, of course the Grand Trunk, by way of Portland, had a great pull in being the shortest route. But if there was a fast Atlantic line of steamers at Halifax, the Intercolonial would get a great deal more traffic.

To Mr. Blair, the witness said that the new management of the Intercolonial would carry on a progressive and aggressive policy to capture freight.

Mr. Blair:—And you don't despair of Halifax becoming a seaport of some importance?

Mr. Schreiber:—No. Mr. Blair:—Have we not a traffic arrangement with the Grand Trunk for traffic from Montreal and the West?

Mr. Schreiber:—Yes. Mr. Blair:—You are also aware that we have been making arrangements with the Parry Sound Railway for traffic from that road to go to the Intercolonial?

Mr. Schreiber:—Yes, by the Parry Sound and Canada Atlantic road. Mr. Blair:—Then a national railway can work on a smaller margin of profit than a private company could?

Mr. Schreiber:—Of course. The Intercolonial, having no interest to pay on a bonded debt, could carry cheaper than other roads.

Mr. Archibald, Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway, was examined by Mr. Borden in regard to embankments, road-beds, etc., of the Intercolonial. The witness said that the difference between the cost of a mile of railway with a 67-lb. rail and 70-lb. rail was between $800 and $1000. As to the embankments of the Drummond County road, from Chaudiere to Moose Park, they were lower than the Intercolonial, and water-soaked. The ditches were too near the track, and the bank was not up to the standard of the Intercolonial. There was no fencing for twenty miles of Drummond road.

To Mr. Blair, the witness said that he came over the Drummond County road at about 30 miles an hour or over, and he gave his evidence from that one trip.

THE FEMINE OBSERVER

Dove luncheons are very popular Lenten entertainments.

Women buy calendars because they are ornamental, but they rarely change the dates upon them.

Selfishness is a despicable quality, but it is largely cultivated by those who get the most out of this life.

The shepherdess hat and the Champaign are the two leading forms in millinery for spring and summer wear.

"Will I wear my new spring hat or my old fur coat?" has been the feminine query during the last few days.

All sorts of nodding chickens and rabbits make the stores a veritable wonderland of delight to the youngsters at this season.

Many a woman pretends to compare her watch with the jeweler's timepiece, when she is really only judging by some boarding house struggles.

In a cook book we are told how to make the best of an old fowl. A more pertinent bit of information would be how to get the best of it, judging by some boarding house struggles.

When an unusual occurrence takes place in the street it seems as though people must drop down from the trees or spring up from the ground, judging by the rapidity with which a crowd gathers.

It is to be regretted that the youthful athlete who boards has discovered that a course of rope jumping is fine indoor exercise. This is a sentiment quoted by one whose words are below one of these enthusiasts.

HUMOR OF THE KLONDYKE.

Some Incidents of Real Life That Lighten the Situation.

"I guess the old saying is true that variety is the spice of life," remarks Farmer Hakestraw, looking up from a reading. "But it kind of strikes me that there is a little more of that kind of spice than is just exactly palatable in the newspaper reports from the Klondyke gold fields."

"I have been reading that there is a lot of no vacant mining and left there, and that there are plenty of rich claims for all comers; statements that the reports of the fabulous finds are grossly exaggerated and that the half has not yet been told of the riches of that new El Dorado; that crime and violence are rampant there, and that the people are open-handed, law-abiding and hospitable; that the winters are prolonged stretches of almost unbearable cold interspersed with terrible blizzards which only the strongest and hardiest can hope to survive, and that the climate, though cold, is extremely healthful, and that when one gets used to it the exceedingly low temperature is felt hardly more than a much milder degree of cold would be; that only one man in a thousand can justly hope to win a fortune there even at the risk and probable sacrifice of his health, and that after passing through the clear, pure cold of the winter the gold-seeker emerges in the spring fatter and healthier than at the beginning of the winter, ready to pick up the golden wealth which is his for the taking."

"I like variety in my newspaper reading as a general thing, but I'll have to confess that the Klondyke information that I have been acquiring of late is just a little too spicy for my taste."

His Identity.

"One day," said the returned Klondyke millionaire, "we found a poor fellow with a high, bulging brow, dead in the snow and frozen as stiff as a crowbar. The body was terribly emaciated from lack of food, and there were no papers or any other articles on his person to indicate his identity."

"His pockets did not contain a cent of money, but in them we found a description of a $10,000 summer cottage, a recipe for making ice-cream soda, a formula for curing gout, a newspaper clipping warning its readers against a dangerous counterfeit hundred-dollar bill, a description of an ancient Roman banquet, full directions for raising orchids, an advertisement of a Florida orange grove, a clipping describing a pleasure steamer yacht, another about the management of a thoroughbred racing stable, a small pocket map of Samoa, a price list of rare coins, instructions for detecting flaws in diamonds, a solemn warning against habitual over-eating, advice on wooing and winning a wealthy and beautiful young widow, and directions for the cure of a sunstroke. There was absolutely nothing on the body to show who or what he might have been, so we decided to call him an optimist, and let it go at that."

A Variety of Money.

"I understand that your husband returned from Klondyke last night," Mrs. Jurnegan, said the inquisitive villager. "Is he about the house now? I'd like to have a little talk with him regarding that region."

"I am sorry, Mr. Aaskington," replied the good woman, "but I am afraid you can't see him now. He is in bed upstairs, suffering from what the doctor calls nervous prostration, I believe it was."

"That's too bad," Mrs. Jurnegan. By the way, the report is in circulation that he brought all kinds of money home with him. Is that true?"

"Well, I don't know that he brought all kinds of money, Mr. Aaskington, but he certainly brought several kinds. He fetched back two copper cents, a Chinese coin that he had used for a lucky piece, a Confederate bill which he had taken along to swap to the Indians, a few pieces of Esquimaux shell money, a bit of wampum, a lead nickel, and a poker chip. If he hasn't brought home all kinds of money, he has certainly returned with quite a variety."

Head

The languorous quiet of Elysium was gently broken now and then by the clink of glasses and the pop of opening ambrosia bottles.

"That's Charles I.," explained one who had been there long enough to have learned the ropes. "He has an idea if he keeps up the gait he'll wake up with a head some morning."—Life.

TUB SILO UNDER A SHED.

Have the scantling bevelled at the mill. Tell the sawyer what sized silo you purpose to build, and he will bevel them so that they will exactly fit. The additional expense will be less than that of attempting to stop up the cracks with rags. We do not desire to stop all shrinking and swelling. When filled we wish the silo to swell some to aid in making tighter joints, and then, when empty, we want it to shrink so that moisture cannot collect between the staves and rot them out. The coating of coal-tar on the inside, applied after the hoops are drawn up tight, is entirely sufficient.

Hot tar is very penetrating and will find its way into every crevice, thoroughly excluding the air. Whether it will last longer or be more effective than when thinned with gasoline I cannot state. There can now be purchased in the market tar paint ready for application. In our experience with this man who was painting the exterior was twice overcome by noxious gases, and was compelled to leave the silo. Gas tar may be purchased very cheaply, and when heated slightly makes a very efficient paint.

This kind of asphalt may be purchased for about three dollars per ton. This, if used alone, is so brittle upon becoming hard that it soon cracks and becomes worthless. Mixed in the proportion of nine parts Trinidad asphalt to one part of gas tar, and heated, it makes a valuable application for roofs, stable floors or silos.—Rural New Yorker.

A Dairyman's Life.

A dairyman's life is necessarily one of almost ceaseless activity. He must make all his plans subject to "milk-time" night and morning. Through the heat of the day he is engaged, directly or indirectly, in some work made necessary for the maintenance of the cows. Cultivating fodder crops, at work in the meadow, or repairing pasture fences, his labor has one object—milk production. Then also there is the care of the milk, and its manufacture if it is made up at home, which devolves on both the dairyman and his wife, and thus the whole family is interested in an industry on which they are dependent for a living.

A great many complaints are heard about the confining nature of dairymen, but strange or not to say, such complaints never issue from people who were really making money out of the business. Such ones always seemed to think that dairymen was a very nice business to be engaged in, and instead of berating the fact that they had to milk cows twice a day, they took the greatest pride in every one of their milk animals.

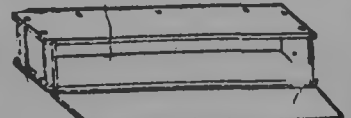

This, of course, was part of the secret of their success, for a man who proceeds eagerly and willingly to perform a duty, will do it far better than one who finds it an unpleasant task.

It is not too much to say that those who really wish to make a profit out of their dairies will find but little trouble in doing so. All that is required is that they take the same interest in their business that an energetic merchant or tradesman does in his.

Those who wish to make dairymen should go out of the business at once, and embark in something that they will like.

A Milk Can Trough.

Where no better plan can be put to use, a good method of keeping milk is to build a milk can trough, as portrayed herewith. The trough is shown on its side with the lid open and down. It is of two-inch hemlock plank, eight feet long, two feet deep and eighteen inches wide. This affords room for eight cans twelve inches in diameter and sixteen inches deep. The trough is sunk in the ground in front of the pump curb, in such a position that all waste water is discharged into it and out through an opposite end, which aids in keeping the water cool during the day. The trough is emptied and refilled night and morning. A neatly-fitting lid of the same material fits to the top, and on extra hot days several pieces of old carpet are thrown over the lid. To make the water tight two rods are fastened through each end, and the nuts drawn up moderately tight. Before joining the ends together they should be daubed with white lead to more closely close up all the services.

MILK CAN TROUGH.

A Cross-Breeding Experiment.

Lord Londonderry has made a very interesting experiment in cross-breeding cattle. He bought a well-bred white Shorthorn bull from Mr. Duthie, of Collynie. To him he mated four Polled Angus heifers, four Galloways, four West Highlanders, and four Shetlanders. The produce are now grazing in one field, and are very fine cattle. A Galloway steer and a West Highland steer are very noticeable for size and smoothness. Such a test carried along for a few years would be both instructive and curious.

Very Likely.

Little Elmer (who is a great reader)—

Professor Broadhead—Well, my son? Little Elmer—Pa, do you suppose Enoch Arden waited till he was sure that his little wife had married again before he came back?—Judge.

Mixed Metaphors. A very amusing collection of mixed metaphors by well-known French authors has been brought together by Th. Ravue des Revues. The following are a few specimens:

Francisque Sarcey: "You recognize her mother's hand in Mile. Marguerite Ugaldé's voice."

P. de Saint-Victor: "Ezekiel transcribes and comments on sacred verse. He reads with one eye. He writes with the other."

P. de Terrail: "He seized him with one hand by the throat, and with the other he spat in his face."

Flaubert: "His birthday present was a blue physiognomic head, all painted in blue, and marked with letters down to the throat."

J. J. Ampere, describing Egyptian giants: "Their feet are as large as five of mine."

The exhibition of fashionable and stylish millinery and mantles at Miss Delaney's millinery emporium, George St., exceeds all former displays. The New York, Montreal, and Toronto millinery marts have contributed their best and latest, and consequently Miss Delaney has a magnificent stock of millinery and millinery goods of the very newest styles and choicest selections—all selected with the full knowledge of what would meet the wants of her numerous customers. For latest fashion, style and beauty, Miss Delaney's stock can not be surpassed.
Her formal spring opening last week was the most successful ever held in town.

Shining Dramatic Geniuses

In view of the entertainment to be given at the Lakefield on April 16th, under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church, recently established at Young's Point, it is interesting to note that the Catholic Literary Association of Peterborough have promised their assistance. The Peterborough dramatic geniuses are not the only ones. "There are others," and we hear that the Young's Point Dramatic Society started last year mean to make them go for all they are worth.
The forthcoming entertainment alluded to will afford an opportunity for us to compare their respective abilities, which, it is understood, are of no mean order.

Railway Notes

—The Canadian Pacific Railway from Moose Jaw to Donald is under snow blockade, the worst known in years.

—The summer rates on the O.P.R. will go into force on May 1st. The tourist rates commence on the first of June.

—The "Klondike flyer" is a great convenience to the people of Peterborough who want to run up to Toronto at mid-day.

—The Canadian Pacific's earnings for the same period this year were $133,- 000; last year the figures were $125,- 000, an increase of $8,000.

—The Grand Trunk's earnings for the week ending March 21, 1898, amounted to $153,470, against $110,515, for the same period last year, an increase of $42,955.

The introduction of huge freight engines upon the Canadian Pacific Railway has made the immediate strengthening of bridges necessary.
Already gangs of bridge builders are upon the road testing and bracing all doubtful structures. This move will make work for a large number of new men.

Bicycle Notes
The bicycle skirt becomes a perfect rainy-day garment for the woman who has sufficient courage to wear it.

Keep your saddle soft and dry and protect it from the rain. Unprotected saddles get hard, unshapely, are uncomfortable, and are liable to cause a chill to the rider who neglects this small duty. A saddle cover is a wise investment.

A new English tire consists of a tube with projecting tubular fastening edges which fit into the spokes of the rim, and which communicate with the interior of the tire and are filled when it is inflated the expansion holding them tightly within the rim. Overlapping edges on the part of the tire which comes against the rim are so connected that they can be readily drawn apart to give access to the interior of the tire.

It is a great mistake not to get your handbars in a position that you are perfectly comfortable. Every rider has a different stretch of arm, and, as a consequence, the handlebar may be too high or too low for another rider.
If too high, the rider will feel that he has not perfect control over the machine, while if too low the weight of the body is thrown on the arms, and the result is that riding becomes a misery. For many people the handlebars should preferably be an inch or so above the level of the saddle.

A MYSTERIOUS AFFAIR

Miss Esther Young Disappeared from Town Yesterday Morning

Esther Young was the chief topic of conversation last night. For the past five weeks, the young lady, who came to Peterborough from Rockdale, Belmont township, has been rooming at
Mr. Henry Newton's, Hunter street.
She was noticed to have been despondent and in dejected mood, and was principally on a milk and fish diet. Shortly before one o'clock yesterday morning, Mr. Newton heard her moving about in her room, evidently busy about something. He heard her go out shortly afterwards and go young into the yard, returning again. He supposed she must have gone out again sometime between that and early morning for he heard no more of her, but at about noon his little girl told him that she had not heard Miss Young all the morning, and was wondering what was the matter. Mr. Newton went to her room and found all Miss Young's goods packed in her trunk and a note telling the family that she had got an early chance to the country.
At noon Mr. Newton received a strange letter from Miss Young, who advised in a few lines that she was dead, and that she was in the hands of a natural death. Similar letters were received by three friends.

On going down to the bank of the Otonabee river, Mr. Newton traced the imprints of a woman's boots in the mud right to the water's edge.

Miss Young was the daughter of
Mr. and Mrs. George Young, St.
Methodist Church on Sunday evening.

River and St. Ambrose Notes
—The snow bridges near the locks were opened yesterday for the first time this season.

—Supt. Walters' men and Lockmaster Curtin, of Lindsay, are busy preparing for the opening of navigation.

—It is rumored that Mr. Sam. Parkin, of Lindsay, has purchased or leased the St. Stranger, owned by Mr. Carnegie, of Port Perry.

—The steamer North Star leaves this morning for Hastings. She takes a couple of new loads of brick from Welsh's brick yard, below the locks, to Hastings.

—Mr. Thos. Marshall, engineer of the Esturgeon, passed through Peterborough the other day to Bobcaygeon, and is now hard at work refitting his machinery.

—Mr. Sandy Smith, the popular engineer of the North Star, has been re-engaged for the coming season by Capt. Martin. S. dy, as he is familiarly called, is a favorite with all who patronize his route, his musical abilities and comic songs being appreciated.

—The Alice-Ethel, Knowlton Bros. of Lindsay, will leave the city at the foot of Ridout-st., Lindsay, practically a new craft. Peter Barlow, of Lin-dsey's local shipbuilder, and a couple of men have been at work on her nearly all winter, and have entirely rebuilt the lower part of the hull.

—Capt. Crandell, of Lindsay, is already at work fitting up the favorite excursion steamer, Crandella. The boat received a new hull last fall at Bobcaygeon, and carpenters are now extending the cabin flush with the sides and making other improvements that will be appreciated by the public.

SALE OF THE MARKET TOLLS

Mr. J. D. Baple is the Prize for the Year at $200

Acting under the instructions of the Market Committee, Mr. Jno. Haggart offered for public competition the market tolls and charges for the year commencing April 1st next.
There was a large attendance in the council chamber, where the auction was held, including Councillors Robertson, Dene, Cobb, Langford, Hamilton, Dawson and J. M. White. After Mr. S. R. Armstrong, the clerk, had read the conditions of sale, a discussion arose as to the by-law recently passed requiring sacks of potatoes to be weighed. Mr. Neill, the gentleman who introduced the question, wanted to know if these articles must be weighed whether the purchaser so desired or not, and the reply was the re-peating of the by-law. Still Mr.
Neill, Mr. Green and others, were dissatisfied, a belief being expressed that the provisions would keep sellers from the market. The point was also raised as to who would have to see to the enforcement of the by-law, and it was pointed out that one of the clauses provided for the appointment of the police constables as market inspectors.

After about half an hour's delay,
a start was made, a bid of a thousand dollars set the ball rolling.
Still the thing hung fire, but when
Mr. Haggart announced that there would be a sale even at that price the bidding became fairly brisk, advancing in offers of $100 to $1,000.
Ultimately, Mr. Baple became the purchaser at $1,000—$200 more than the amount for which Mr. Green secured the tolls for last year.

Uncle Tom's Cabin

Standing room was at a premium in the Opera House last night, when Stowe's mammoth aggregation presented Uncle Tom's Cabin. The fame of this celebrated company is worldwide, and the almost incessant applause which greeted them would have been flat had it not been for the serried ranks of the lawyer, was right up-to-date throughout and furnished amusement galore by his ready wittisms. Geo. Dorsey as Uncle Tom; C. L. Jackson as Simon Legree; and little May Dickenson as Eva, were flourishing stars in their respective roles. Mr. and Mrs. Woe
Davis' specialty, the Animated Song Sheet, was particularly well received, as was also the cake walk. Uncle Tom's Cabin has never been better put on in this city than it was last night by Mr. Stowe's company.

Will be Tried on a Grand Charge
Lindsay Post: Mr. Michael Basso, Italian interpreter, arrived from Toronto today with Ignazio Cusumano, the Italian binna vendor who stands charged with a serious offence against a little girl named Peacock, of the south ward, in September last. Our readers will remember that the accused was committed to goal here to await trial, but was admitted to bail in the sum of $400 upon application being made to Chief Justice Rose, of Toronto. The case came before the grand jury at the fall sittings and a true bill was returned, but Justice temour refused to allow it to go to the jury, owing to Mr. Basso's tardy arrival with the accused.

"The Country Doctor"

In speaking to a bill at Washington intended to the rights of certain classes of newspapers, Hon. Champ Clark, of Missouri, pleaded for an extension rather than a restriction of the rights and privileges granted to the country editor. Mr. Clark's tribute to the country editor contains a vast amount of truth.

"I am unalterably opposed," he said,
"to anything that will injure the country editor, curtail his profits, circumscribe his usefulness, or place an additional thorn in his pathway. The rural editor—God bless him—is the most persistent of teachers. Like charity as described by St. Paul in the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, he 'suffereth long and is kind; he is envied not himself, is not puffed up; doth not behave himself proudly; seeketh not his own; is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil;
rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in truth; beareth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.'

"He is the backbone of every community, the promoter of every laudable enterprise, the worst underpaid laborer in the vineyard. Counting his space as his capital, he gives more to charity, his means considered than any other member of society. He is a power in politics, a pillar of the church, a leader in the crusade for better morals. He is pre-eminently the friend of humanity. Line upon line, paragraph upon paragraph, day by day, he is embalming in cold type the facts from which the Horodotus, Tacitus, Siamonidi, or Macauley of the future will write the history of our times. He fully chronicles our advent into the world, briefly notes our uprisings and downfalls, and sorrowfully records our exit."
The measure it is unnecessary to add, was defeated.

SPLENDID TO THE END

Gladstone, Grand in His Last Hours,
Standing by the Dark River

His Companion for Years, a Little Dog Tied of His Own Grief at Separation

(Special to the Times.)

LONDON, March 28.—The Westminster Gazette this afternoon, referring to the health of Mr. Gladstone, says:
It is no news, we fear, to say, that Mr. Gladstone's illness must necessarily be fatal in a comparatively short time. Mr. Gladstone is fully informed as to his own condition. He asked the doctors to tell him the truth and he was thankful when informed that he had no chance of recovery.

His state of mind is one of complete happiness. His life goes on quietly and evenly. Music is his chief solace.
It soothes the pain.

The death of a black Pomeranian pet, which for nine years had been a constant companion of Mr. Gladstone, has been an additional pang to the whole family. When Mr. Gladstone went to Cannes, the pet was left with the Drews, but he pined, would not eat and was returned to Hawarden the day Mr. Gladstone returned, and he died on Friday.

A YEAR IN CROWN LANDS

THE ONTARIO GOVERNMENT'S TIM-BER SUFFERS VERY LITTLE FROM FIRE.

Special to the Times.

TORONTO, March 28.

The annual report of the Department of Crown Lands was published to-day.
It deals almost entirely with the transactions of the year.

It showed that $9,147,232 were received, of which $34,400 was received from the sale of mining land. The department also realized $3,045 from sales of former years.

Besides this, 6886 acres of clergy reserve land and 829 of Grammar school land and other minor sales were made.
The total revenue amounted to $1,609,- 285. The expenditure amounted to $51,083.

There are 161 townships open for location under the free grants and homesteads act. During the year 683 locations were made on 91,910 acres of land, and 49 locates purchased 2,197 acres;
288 patents were issued to locates.

The following townships have been opened during the year: Cassimir, Haddo, Cherriman, Jennings, Hendrie, Burwash and London in the districts of Nipissing, and Sanford, Zealand and Aubrey in the Rainy River district. In the appendix to the report these townships are described as regards location, timber, soil, game, etc.

In speaking of the fire ranges, the report says: Fortunately the summer was more than ordinarily wet, and consequently, although there was an immense number of men in the woods prospecting for gold, no serious fires occurred, and no pine timber destroyed.

Men and medicines are judged by what they do. The great cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla give it a good name everywhere.

A man may be the worst villain going, but if he looks refined and is well dressed every woman who sees him put in a patrol wagon will feel the greatest sort of indignation against the policeman who arrested him.

POLITICAL REWARDS

A few days since we referred editorially to the subject of political office-mongering and nepotism. The question is again brought before us by the recent Liberal caucus in Ottawa, and by the still more recent gathering of disaffected Liberals in Quebec. It would appear that the state of alarm has been sounded in our locality, though the provincial representative, Mr. J. R. Stratton, disclaims all knowledge on the part of official Liberals of a desire to deprive of Government appointments gentlemen who may happen to possess Conservative inclinations and sympathies. In the Times article which called forth this denial, we observe that the Tories could scarcely complain if they were paid back in their own coin, but at the same time we feel that the discarded spoils system based on the motto that "To the victors belong the spoils" cannot be too strongly condemned by those who desire to preserve the honesty and independence of our public servants.

We all know the state of affairs which exists across the border owing to this system of office-mongering. Political life in the United States is practically one mass of corruption and bribery, and there is no more to be said. The general reputation of the practice in question has brought into prominence a number of men who are not only the most corrupt but also the most dishonest of the lot. It is this shape of dollars and cents. The more decent-minded man is deterred from playing his abilities at the disposal of the nation, and has little or no ambition to rush in where even angels might fear to tread. Unscrupulous men have little difficulty in fighting their way to the top of the political tree, and their power is such as to cripple and often destroy the honest opinion of the electorate and deprive it of its just weight in Government affairs. They intensify the bitterness of party strife, and altogether bring about deplorable results.

This is a black picture, but it cannot be too darkly painted. We do not want a similar illustration on Canada's canvas. It is true that the malignant artist has commenced his work here, but it is not too late to prevent him from producing a hideous picture. And to the credit of a few of the more prominent Liberals be it said that there is a disinclination to disturb political opponents who are in the enjoyment of public offices and are performing their duties satisfactorily and well.

It is to be feared that the payment of members of parliament is at the bottom of the whole mischief. Remuneration for services performed in a government departmental office is of course necessary, but when all members receive a fixed wage, though a small one, it reduces the honor of representing one's fellow citizen to a commercial basis, and appeals to the cupidity of adventurers. It has been said that Canada is too young a country to be able to dispense with the system of payment of members, but we admit we would like to see the experiment given a trial. The British Parliament and English public life are recognized as models. M.P.s are not paid in England, but the national interests do not suffer in consequence.

It is a "tie" in West Huron, and it is now certain that Beck will get it in the neck.

Yesterday's fine weather helped us, if not to mend our ways, to keep the crossings clean.

It didn't matter even if it did rain opening week, but every maid who has her Easter hat bought now prays for a clear day for its first appearance.

Judging by the prevalence of a certain cerealine on our breakfast tables, we would be led to believe that the first meal of the day is oat meal.

A woman in a seal-skin jacket and another with no outer wrapping walked side by side yesterday, each considering she was dressed decidedly au fait.

Whatever may be said of other people and places, it is clear that the name of any of our councillors will never become a buy-word and a reprimand.

Our local council chamber is not always the sweetest-smelling place in the town. The Sanitary Inspector ought to have put his nose in there on Monday.

After all, the much-written "war" may be a campaign on (news) paper. A wordy warfare with pens is less destructive than a contest with bayonets and rifles.

There are no flies on our town councillors and, unlike the case in certain localities, the wily jobber has no satisfaction in weaving a web in the hope of catching some.

In a neighboring locality there is a demand for more saloons. Those who want the number of licenses increased claim that present methods practically make a corner in the business. As if corners in saloons were not of old standing!

"A dandy council we've got—they don't understand their own by-laws," was a remark overheard in the council chamber last Monday. The observer was not strictly accurate. The failure to comprehend was on the part of those who refused to understand.

When all Canada is enjoying delightful spring weather, various sections in the United States and all England are having snow falls and violent storms. Kipling should certainly withdraw his "Lady of the Snows," as applied to Canada, or else dub the old land "Mother of the Snows."

In referring to the death of James Payn a daily newspaper says he was a novelist and journalist, being before the public for nearly forty years as a writer of fiction. This is rather rough on journalists. The men on yellow journals may be writers of fiction, but the whole profession are not tarred with the same brush.

Do you notice the agitation going on all over the country for the heads of Tory civil servants? The whole Liberal party seem to be on their mettle, judging from the remarks that our exchanges, and they demand that the Tories be bounced and their places given to Liberals. Yet our local Liberal contemporary says it is all moonshine and "Out out of the whole cloth."

THE CASE OF MISS YOUNG

The Missing Lady Supposed to Have Been Seen in Monaghan

Text of the Extraordinary Letter Written by Miss Young—Quotations From the Scriptures

The mystery associated with Miss Young's disappearance has not yet been cleared up. It is possible that the lady has not succumbed by drowning for a person answering her description called at the house of Mr. McKee—a farmer living near the border of Monaghan and Smith townships—at about six o'clock on Monday morning. The girl referred to was given some refreshment, and she afterwards lay down on a couch and went to sleep. At nine o'clock she left, and said that she was proceeding to Myrtle.

We give below the text of the extraordinary letter Miss Young addressed to each of three friends in town:

"DEAR FRIEND,"

"God's time having come for physical death to be overcome—Romans viii. ch. 20:3 ver.

"God has given me to comprehend through the Holy Ghost, also through His word—Matt. iv. ch. 2nd ver.

"Also St. Matt. i. ch. 13th ver.

"With the wild beasts—Luke iv. ch. 2nd ver.

"That our Saviour was in the wilderness to renew His physical life as well as spiritual (getting the milk from the wild beasts) for forty days which did the work. Physical lives are controlled by worms to a similar extent as the steam of an engine is by the driver fuel, water, etc. If all be right it does good work until worn out. But we are of Divine workmanship and we will be controlled by God's laws, Leviticus, vii. ch. 3rd ver.

Leviticus vii. ch. 23rd ver.

"The fact of being so nourishment for our bodies (being more spiritual) simply destroy the machinery. Keep all God's laws as given to Moses relative to the physical life and renew the physical life every thirty years. We may live until Christ comes—Isaiah iv. ch. 2nd-5th ver; Acts ii. ch. 35 v.

"I Cor. xv ch. 51-58 v.

"God's creation or machinery requires no assistance if run according to directions. Wrong and overeating causes all sickness. Fasting is God's only remedy—St. Matt. xv ch. 32-33 v.

"St. Matt. xiv ch. 13th to 21st verse.

"If you take the fresh milk as God made it, without drugs, etc. Water changes the nutritious element or value. Take it slowly from a small teacup. Not more than the system can manage (which is a sin against the body) say a quart more or less per day. I tried a quart, but found it too much, so I came down to a pint. You can do as much work, or more, as on any other diet, but you will require help from God to control your appetite. Keep all God's laws as given to Moses: relating to the body, if not the sinner shall be accursed Isaiah iv. ch. 20th verse.

"Don't eat animal food after a real fast, as it sickens, except fish, as Christ fed the multitude.

"Please give me a practical test before publishing.

"P.S.—I will not die a natural death."

Corinthians xv ch. 26th ver.

"Brown bread and beef is the best to tone up the system on. I also learned the system demanded the animal food to reassert the animal life."

An Important Musical College

The Toronto College of Music, affiliated to the University of Toronto, by its advanced work, has attained to a place among the very highest rank of musical educational institutions in the world. Its staff of teachers is the most experienced in Canada, Mr. F. H. Torrington being the musical director. It follows, as a matter of course, that every advantage that extended experience can produce is available by students who are under his supervision. The superior work of the theory department is manifested by the fact that this is the only musical institution in Canada whose students have passed the University of Toronto examinations for the Musical Bachelor's degree. That the College has the confidence of the public at large is evident from the fact that almost every point of the Dominion and the United States is represented among its students. This year has been a decidedly marked one at the college, both as to the large number of students in attendance, and the excellence of the work already done this season as shown by the large number of concert programs which are being continually given. The department of artistic education and expression is in the hands of the celebrated Dr. Carlyle under whom every phase of training is provided.

Amongst those on the teaching staff are the names of Mr. F. H. Torrington, Mr. Frank Welman, Mr. W. E. Fairclough, Mr. T. C. Jeffers, Mr. John Bayley, Mr. C. Lucy Franklin, Mr. E. H. Williams, and other eminent teachers. A special summer session is announced for July 1st, and is designed to meet the wants of those who are unable to attend at any other period of the year. Full information regarding this session may be had by applying to the College Secretary, 12 and 14 Pembroke Street, Toronto.

The Business Outlook

The weekly statement as to the trade and commerce of the United States and Canada is generally satisfactory. There have been certain influences at work due to climatic and other causes which have caused the customary fluctuations in exchange, but taken all in all there is no cloud of any size in the sky, nor is any section of trade materially affected. The business of the country runs as usual, and the country runs as usual, and the country runs as usual. The Dominion of Canada for the time, as usual, but manufacturers and jobbers report that trade coming in to be of an encouraging volume. Ocean navigation will open earlier this year than for twenty-five years past, and from this great things are anticipated, especially as giving an impetus to the cattle trade and agricultural industries. Failures in the Dominion of Canada last week numbered 29, as against 23 in the preceding week, 40 in the corresponding week of last year, 44 in 1896 and 49 in 1895. Canadian bank clearings for the past week aggregated $25,535,000, a decrease of six-centes of 1 per cent. from the previous week, but an increase of 45 per cent. over last year.

The Secalt Art

The fact of a Young's Point party having consulted a Peterborough "fortune teller" reminds one of an easy way of "consulting the oracle." The charm called Koran-gardian, the turning of the Koran, in Persia is well known, and the writer has been present when it has been seriously practiced. The way in which it is done is as follows: A key is so placed among the leaves of the Holy Book that the handle and part of the shaft may protrude, and it is secured by a bit of cord fastened lightly across the volume. Two persons then put their forefingers under the handle and support the book, which hangs down lightly between their hands. A certain verse is then repeated once for every suspected person, and at the name of the thief the volume turns round of itself, and the handle slips off the forefingers of the two persons that hold it. This superstition was formerly common in Europe, the Bible being the locus tenens of the Koran; it is now obsolete, except in a few remote localities. The Portuguese of Goa, being a people of strong faith, will use a hymn or mass book as well as the Holy Volume, and recite an Ave Maria, sometimes with, sometimes without, a Pater Noster in the Lingua Baroa.

HUMOR OF THE KLONDYKE.

Some Incidents of Real Life That Lighten the Situation.

"I guess the old saying is true that variety is the spice of life," remarked Farmer Maketraw, looking up from the reading, "but it kind of strikes me that there is a little more of that kind of spice than is just exactly palatable in the newspaper reports from the Klondyke gold fields."

"I have been reading that there is little or no vacant mining land left there, and that there are plenty of rich claims for all comers; statements that the reports of the fabulous finds are grossly exaggerated and that the half has not yet been told of the riches of that new El Dorado; that crime and violence are rampant there, and that the people are open-handed, law-abiding and hospitable; that the winters are prolonged stretches of almost unbearable cold interspersed with terrible blizzards which only the strongest and hardiest can hope to survive, and that the climate, though cold, is extremely healthful, and that when one gets used to it the exceedingly low temperature is felt hardly more than a that only one man in a thousand can justly hope to win a fortune there even at the risk and probable sacrifice of his health, and that after passing through the clear, pure air of the spring fatter and healthier than at the beginning of the winter, ready to pick up the golden wealth which is his for the taking."

"I like variety in my newspaper reading, as a general thing, but I'll have to confess that the Klondyke information that I have been acquiring of late is just a little too spicy for my taste."

His Identity.

"One day," said the returned Klondyke millionaire, "we found a poor fellow with a high, bulging brow, dead in the snow and frozen as stiff as a crowbar. The body was terribly emaciated from lack of food, and there were no papers or any other articles on his person to indicate his identity."

"His pockets did not contain a cent of money, but in them we found a description of a $10,000 summer cottage, a recipe for making ice-cream and a formula for curing gout, a newspaper clipping warning its readers against a dangerous counterfeit hundred-dollar bill, a description of an ancient Roman banquet, full directions for raising orchids, an advertisement of a Florida orange grove, a clipping describing a plutocrat's steam yacht, another about the management of a thoroughbred racing stable, a small pocket map of Samoa, a price list of rare coins, instructions for detecting flaws in diamonds, a solemn warning against habitual over-eating, advice on winning and winning a wealthy and beautiful young widow, and directions for the cure of a sunstroke. There was absolutely nothing on the body to show who or what he might have been, so we decided to call him an optimist, and let it go at that."

A Variety of Money.

"I understand that your husband remarked from Klondyke last night, Mrs. Jurigan," said the inquisitive village, "is he about the house now? I'd like to have a little talk with him regarding that region."

"I am sorry, Mr. Askington," replied the good woman, "but I am afraid you can't see him now. He is in bed upstairs, suffering from what the doctor calls nervous-er-or-prosperity. I believe it was."

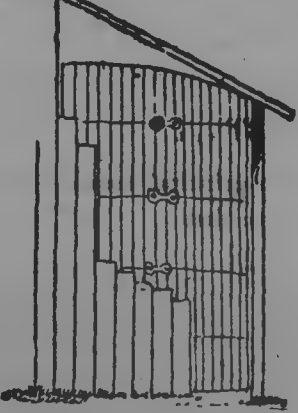

"That's too bad," Mrs. Jurigan! By the way, the report is in circulation that he brought all kinds of money home with him. Is that true?"

"Well, I don't know that he brought all kinds of money, Mr. Askington, but he certainly brought several kinds. He fetched back two copper cents, a Chinese coin that he had used for a lucky piece, a Confederate bill which he had taken along to swap to the Indians, a few pieces of Esquimaux shell money, a bit of wampum, a lead nickel, and a poker chip. If he hasn't brought home all kinds of money, he has certainly returned with quite a variety."

Head.

The languorous quiet of Elysium was gently broken now and then by the clink of glasses and the pop of opening ambrosia bottles.

"That's Charles I.," explained one who had been there long enough to have learned the ropes. "He has an idea if he keeps up the gait he'll wake up with a head some morning."—Life.

TUB SILO UNDER A SHED.

Have the scantling beveled at the mill. Tell the sawyer what sized silo you purpose to build, and he will bevel them so that they will exactly fit. The additional expense will be less than that of attempting to stop up the cracks with rags. We do not desire to stop all shrinking and swelling. When filled we wish the silo to swell some to aid in making tighter joints, and then, when empty, we want it to shrink so that moisture cannot collect between the staves and rot them out. The coating of coal tar on the inside, applied after the hoops are drawn up tight, is entirely sufficient.

Hot tar is very penetrating and will find its way into every crevice, thoroughly excluding the air. Whether it will last longer or be more effective than when thinned with gasoline I cannot state. There can now be purchased in the market tar paint ready for application. In our experience with this the man who was painting the exterior was twice overcome by anxious gases, and was compelled to leave the silo. Gas tar may be purchased very cheaply, and when heated slightly makes a very efficient paint.

Trinidad asphalt may be purchased for about three dollars a barrel. This, if used alone, is so brittle upon becoming hard that it soon cracks and becomes worthless. Mixed in the proportion of nine parts Trinidad asphalt to one part of gas tar, and heated, it makes a valuable application for stable floors or silos.—Rural New Yorker.

A Dairyman's Life.

A dairyman's life is necessarily one of almost ceaseless activity. He must make all his plans subject to "milking time" night and morning. Through the heat of the day he is engaged, directly or indirectly, in some work made necessary for the maintenance of the cows. Chaffing, feeding crops, at work in the meadow, or repairing pasture fences, his labor has one object—milk production. Then also there is the care of the milk, and its manufacture if it is made up at home, which devolves both on the dairyman and his wife, and thus the whole family are interested in an industry on which they are dependent for a living.

A great many complaints are heard about the confusing nature of dairying, but, strange or not to say, such complaints never issue from people who were really making money out of the business. Such ones always seemed to think that dairying was a very nice business to be engaged in, and instead of berating the fact that they had to milk cows twice a day, they took the greatest pride in every one of their milk animals.

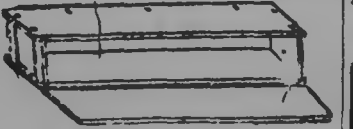

This, of course, was part of the secret of their success, for a man who proceeds eagerly and willingly to perform a duty, will do it far better than one who finds it an unpleasant task.

It is not too much to say that those who really wish to make a profit out of their dairies will find but little trouble in doing so. All that is required is that they take the same interest in their business that an energetic merchant or tradesman does in his.

Those who dislike dairying should go out of the business at once, and embark in something that they will like.

A Milk Can Trough.

Where no better plan can be put to use, a good method of keeping milk is to build a milk can trough, as portrayed herewith. The trough is shown on its side with the lid open and closed. It is of two-inch hemlock plank, eight feet long, two feet deep and eighteen inches wide. This affords room for eight cans twelve inches in diameter and sixteen inches deep. The trough is sunk in the ground in front of the pump curb, in such a position that all waste water is discharged into it and out through an opposite end, which aids in keeping the water cool during the day. The trough is emptied and refilled night and morning. A neatly-fitting lid of the same material fits to the top, and on extra hot days several pieces of old carpet are thrown over the lid. To make it water-tight two rods are fastened through each end, and the nuts drawn up moderately tight. Before joining the ends together they should be daubed with white lead to more closely close up all the crevices.

MILK CAN TROUGH.

A Case of "Breeding Experiments."

Lord Londonderry has made a very interesting experiment in cross-breeding cattle. He bought a well-bred white Shorthorn bull from Mr. Dutche, of Collyville. To him he mated four Angus Highlanders, four Galloways, four West Highlanders, and four Shetlanders. The produce are now grazing in one field, and are very fine cattle. A Galloway steer and a West Highland steer are very noticeable for size and smoothness. Such a test carried along for a few years would be both instructive and curious.

Very Likely.

Little Elmer (who is a great reader)—Prof. Broadhead—Well, my son? Little Elmer—Pa, do you suppose Knock Arden waited till he was sure that his little wife had married again before he came back?—Judge.

Mixed Company.

A very amusing collection of mixed metaphors by well-known French authors has been brought together by The Revue des Revues. The following are a few specimens:

Franchette Leroy: "You recognize her mother's hand in Mrs. Marguerite Ugalde's voice."

P. de Saint-Victor: "Ezekiel transcribes and comments on sacred verse by reading with one eye. He waits with the other."

P. de Terrail: "He seized him with hand by the throat, and with the other he spat in his face."

Alfred Assolant: "The birthday present was a physiological head, all painted in blue, and marked with letters down to the throat."

J. A. Assolant: "Counting Russian soldiers' feet was as large as the moon."

BARRAUD'S VENGEANCE

"Take my advice, Morris. Leave pretty faces alone or you'll get into a scrape—as I once did," he added reflectively.

It was Max Deuchars, the well-known baritone, who had spoken, and the room instantly divided that an adventure lay ahead.

"The story! Let's have the story!" we cried, with one accord, and some one, with delicate forethought, filled up his glass.

"Well, I suppose there is one, if you care to call it such," he said, "so here goes. Most of you remember my entering the profession—there was only one profession in Deuchars's eyes—but you probably did not know that it was pure accident that gave me my first chance. But so it was. I was cast for a very minor part, indeed, but I was at the time ambitious, and even then had not studied Barraud, the principal baritone, so thoroughly that I was practically perfect in his lines.

"He was a good actor and the clearest I have ever known at make-up, but was as indifferent and endowed with a temper the reverse of mine, which caused him to fly off at a tangent on the slightest provocation. One night he failed to show up at the proper time. Dickenson, the manager, called at his wife's door. The regular understudy was taking a holiday. The audience could not be pacified much longer, and he was at a loss what to do. Then I stepped in and volunteered to play the part. He eyed me dubiously for a second or two, but I suppose I looked pretty confident, for he said:

"All right, try—and for goodness sake be quick."

"I tried, and—well, I made a hit. A few weeks later, when Barraud's engagement required renewing, Dickenson offered me the part, as a matter of course. Naturally, I accepted. This turned the charged baritone's resentment against me, though his dismissal was entirely the result of his own negligence, and he went away uttering vows of vengeance against what he termed my sneaking ways.

"So much for Barraud. I did not see him again for nearly two years, during which I played the hero nightly with—modesty forbids me to say more than a fair amount of success. And now, having got rid of what a novelist would call the prologue, let me commence in earnest with the story.

"I had been asked to sing at a morning concert somewhere in the suburbs in aid of a charity. Immediately I ascended the platform I became conscious of the surpassing beauty of one face among the row of faces in front of me. The girl did not more than 19 or 20. The exquisite contour of her cheeks, the shapely mouth and nose, and above all, her eyes fringed with lashes that seemed to droop instinctively to conceal the depths of hazel, all went to make a face that was well nigh perfect in its loveliness.

"I had a hazy idea of having seen her before somewhere, but could not resolve it into anything definite. Each time a few bars' rest gave me the opportunity I looked down upon her. Strange to say, she was generally gazing at me at the same moment, and our glances met. Once I could swear that she even smiled at the circumstance and lowered her eyes purposefully. It was the same during my second song. A subtle kind of magnetism seemed to play between us.

"I was excited, and this time I responded, going no further from the platform than just out of sight of the audience. When I reascended it, I was disappointed and racked my brain again to think where I had seen her.

"When I returned to the artists' room a surprise awaited me. A tiny note lay on my bundle of songs, with my name on the envelope. Instantly I jumped to the conclusion that it was connected with the owner of the lovely face, and tore it open in a little flutter of excitement. Inside was just a plain card, addressed in pencil in a dainty feminine hand thus: 'Come and see me. I have something to tell you.'

"I was at once excited and disappointed. Excited because I felt that my guess was correct; disappointed that she had given no name, nothing whereby I could identify her. She gave an address, 15 Osborne Terrace.

"I looked at my watch and hesitated. I could spare half an hour and still be in time for the theatre. My mind was soon made up.

"Taking a card out of my pocket, I scribbled a few lines on the back hastily. 'Dear Jack,' I wrote. 'Awfully sorry I cannot meet you as promised. Pressing engagement—Max.' They were to Jack Albery, our tenor. I had promised to meet him at the club and go down to the theatre together afterward. That much accomplished, I proceeded to the address given by my fair correspondent.

"I began to the trim household who answered my ring, and then I remembered that I did not know her name.

"The girl smiled behind her apron. 'It's all right, sir. Will you come this way, please?'

"She showed me into the daintily furnished room, and then, the thick carpeting on the floor, and the array of little ornaments scattered profusely around the room, proclaimed its owner to be accustomed to luxury. A second or two later the curtains opened and in walked, not she whom I was expecting, but—Barraud! I had pretty nearly forgotten his existence; but the insolent smile, just showing the white of his teeth on his face as he advanced, brought back vividly to my recollection the circumstances of our last meeting. 'So we meet again, Mr. Deuchars!' it seems that we do, I replied coldly, and, feelingly, I added: 'But will you please acquaint your mistress that I can hear! My time is limited.' I took him to be a servant. I had heard that since his dismissal he had contracted habits of intemperance and gradually sunk down the social ladder.

"Much to my relief, after a moment's hesitation, during which he appeared undecided whether to continue the conversation or accept refusal, he chose the latter and vanished. Five minutes, perhaps, elapsed. Again the curtain divided, and this time—oh! I must apologize most humbly for keeping you waiting, Mr. Deuchars, she said, 'I hardly dared hope that you would find time to pay me a visit.'

"Beauty has but to express a wish and it is immediately bestowed in a manner, and but low to take her hand when—

"Hol hol hol hol—had had had!"

"A burst of derisive laughter checked this gallant intention and caused me to start back in dismay. A furious clutch at a flower torn down the middle, Barraud! Again! It was a grotesque figure that confronted me. She's of feminine attire clinging to him here and there, and the hasty wipe he had given his face had had the effect of distributing the grease paint and powder on it in blotchy, uneven patches.

"Then I comprehended. I have said that he was a consummate master of the art of make-up, and his slight, girlish frame had lent itself to his attempt with marvellous effect. I had been tricked, duped, deceived completely.

"And now! For what purpose had he lured me into his power? For in his power I felt that I was. There was a gleam of incipient madness in his eyes, and the smile of mocking triumph on his patched and powdered features gave him the appearance of some unreal, fantastic figure; some bizarre conception of an overhated imagination. A sense of impending danger caused me to shiver slightly.

"At last he broke the silence, which was fast growing oppressive.

"Well, Monsieur Deuchars, do I not make a charming young lady? Does not your mouth water when I cast my eyes up at you—so? I suppose you thought that because my revenge was long in coming I had forgotten Barraud never forgets. I have waited long for an opportunity, but now—

"You see that? he said, breaking off suddenly. It was a revolver, and I apprehensively at the polished barrel. Shall I tell you what I propose to do with it? But let me congratulate you before I do. You sang well this afternoon, exceedingly well—for the last time."

"The emphasis he threw into the last words confirmed my worst suspicions, and I heard my heart beat faster. Bitterly I cursed the headstrong foolishness which had placed me in his grasp. I looked round the room. There was apparently only one exit, and he sat guarding that and toying carelessly with the revolver. I waited in trepidation for him to rejoin.

"He is now 5.35. At 6.30 or soon after you ought to be at the theatre; is not that so? But you will not be there, make up your mind to that. I propose to—to what you call kill two birds with one stone.

"In the next hour you and I will have a nice quiet conversation—we will recall old memories—and by that time, my very dear friend, the stage manager will be saying to himself: 'Where the dickens is that Deuchars? He will begin to fret about getting into the theatre. He is a fine fellow, excited, as he did on a former occasion, for the undisturbed is away and gone, for no one who can take Deuchars's part—ah! you are surprised to find that I know anything about that, are you not?'

"With callous refinement of torture he prolonged his words until cold perspiration came out all over me, as I sat there helpless and inert.

"So much for the stage manager; I shall consider that we are quits. For you, my dear friend, I have another method. At seven o'clock I shall invite you to play a little game of chance with me. I shall place a piece of paper in that hat of yours. On one your name will be written; on the other, mine. You may then take one out. I give you the privilege of drawing. If it bears your name you will be free—you will have won the game. If mine is the one I shall have won, and at 7.30 o'clock I shall shoot you through the head with this revolver. I give you half an hour, you see, to prepare. I have only one more thing to say. Do not make any attempt to escape; it will be useless, as I have here an effectual means of preventing it. Another thing—of the servant who let you in at the door is my wife; she is the only person in the house besides ourselves. You need not waste your breath in calling out, therefore; you understand?

"He ceased, and I was left to my own thoughts. What they were you, a madman, of course, there was little doubt. I had something over an hour on which to ponder on the very slender chance of life I possessed after that time, for how did I know that he would keep faith did I know that he would keep faith even if our but with chance resulted in my favor.

"If the worst came to the worst, I was resolved to make a fight for life, at any rate. I would not sit there and be done to death like a dog. Another fifteen minutes—seven! As the last time round on the stage he got up. My hat lay on a table nearby; carefully he measured two pieces of paper of exact size, wrote on them in a firm hand, and placed them in it.

"Now, let us take our little gambles with Dame Fortune, Monsieur Deuchars. I invite you to draw. He favors you, very good; MI come off the victor—"

"A loud knocking at the door interrupted me. But I had caught the sound of a voice! I knew. I rushed to the window and shouted with all my strength, 'Jack! help! Jack!'

"He raised the revolver, but I was on him before he could draw the trigger, and pinned him with my arms. Fiercely he strove to wrench himself free, but I held on like grim death, till Jack Albery and another man burst into the room. Barraud's little game was foiled. He saw it, and had the good sense to give in quietly.

"Their opportune arrival was brought about in this way: Jack went down to the club as arranged, and my mistress was duly delivered to him. He thought nothing of it, and proceeded to the theatre in due course, but as the time passed and I did not arrive, he began to wonder what had happened. Then, in feeling for something in his pocket, he chanced to pull out my note again. This time he was surprised to see some time he had not noticed on the previous occasion. It was this card I had received at the concert.

"In the hurry of the moment, when pencilling my message, I must have written on the back of that instead of my own card. He waited another few minutes and then decided to come in search of me, feeling sure that it was no trivial affair which would keep me from the theatre. For prudence sake he had taken a companion, and they arrived, as I have described, just in the nick of time.

"Well, my friends, that is about all. I was not anxious as you may guess, for the affair to become public property, and we let Barraud off, after promising that he would clear out of the country and give up his murderous intentions. However, I heard a day or two afterward that his brain had become completely deranged and that he was confined in a lunatic asylum."—Tidy Bits.

Stomach Trouble

Stomach trouble is the common name applied to a derangement of the system which is keenly felt but vaguely understood. It may mean inability to retain food or to digest it. It may mean nausea, pain after eating, fullness, inordinate craving for food, or entire lack of appetite. Whatever it means, there's trouble, and it's with the stomach. If you have stomach trouble, you will be interested in this letter from a man who had it and was cured by

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For nine years I suffered from stomach trouble. I tried the aid of the best doctors of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, and spent large sums of money, all in vain. One day while waiting a train in Bellaire, O., I picked up a paper with a notice of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I got one bottle to try it. It did me so much good that I purchased five more bottles. I took four of them and gained in flesh, my appetite improved, and now I can eat anything. My stomach is all right, thanks to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—CALVIN M. STEVENS, Uniontown, Pa.

The Trent Valley Canal

In the House of Commons on Monday, Mr. Fielding, the Minister of Finance, brought down the estimates for the next fiscal year. The appropriations for the continuations of the construction of the canal amount to $4,000,000, of which $600,000 is in respect of the Trent Navigation.

Our Maple Products

A trade authority says: of Canada's exports of maple sugar and syrup $5 per cent. goes to the United States. In 1893 the value of the sugar exported was $50,151; 1894, $59,544; 1895, $9,040; 1896, $87,699; 1897, $91,987. Last year only $911 worth of syrup was sold abroad.

A Fall

"Pride goeth before a fall." Such was the experience of one of our young ladies last Monday evening, who, while walking down street, was too high-minded to observe where she was going and so did not notice that there was a considerable drop from the sidewalk to the road. A tumble into the unlovely mud speedily brought her to a contemplation of mundane affairs.

Camps Broken up

Dovey Bros., camps at Kings' Wharf, Emily, and Gannon's, Ennismore, have broken up. Parties who have inspected the cedar taken out may be the finest lot they have ever seen. The logs out at Kings' Wharf are now in boats on Emily Creek, and the mill will start cutting as soon as the tow can be brought here.

Changed Places

Mr. Richard Gough is now in charge of the business here while Mr. Gus Gough is looking after the Toronto end of their large concern. Mr. Gough will remain a couple of weeks, and then return to Toronto. Since opening out in Toronto the firm has done a splendid business. The friends of Mr. Richard in Peterborough are glad to see him once more amongst them.

"Black Frank"

The removal of the old North American Hotel in Cobourg recalls the fact that it was constructed in 1834, and occupied by Mr. Wm. Jacques, better known as "Black Frank." "Black Frank" subsequently kept a saloon in Peterborough, in the basement of the building now occupied by Mr. McFarlane Wilson. Black Frank is said to have eaten 44 plates of oysters at one sitting, on a wager.

In the presence of a large congregation, a solemn requiem high mass was sung at St. Peter's Cathedral yesterday morning for the repose of the soul of the late Archbishop Cleary. Van. Archbishop Cleary officiated, and he was assisted by Rev. Father Scanlan as deacon and Rev. Father P. O'Sullivan as sub-deacon. The Bishop assisted from his throne and pronounced the absolution.

Proposed Sunday Bicycle Parade

A Peterborough bicyclist writes to the Times suggesting that it would be an admirable idea for the local bicycle clubs to hold an annual church parade to one of the town churches. He thinks that a special service for bicyclists is quite as much in order and as useful as for our soldiers and fraternal societies.

The suggestion is to be commended.

In England and America, Sunday bicycle parades are especially common.

Thankless Corporations

The preventing of a railway disaster by the timely discovery of a broken rail and the stopping of the approaching train, a locomotive engineer received a reward of two marks. G. E. Artist, while living in Barrie some years ago, happened to discover a heavy obstruction on the track, which assuredly would have caused death and disaster, which he was just in time to prevent by signalling the train. He was not even thanked by the railway people.

Ottawa vs. Peterboro

The Toronto Telegram says: John R. Dickson, representing Ottawa, for the C. W. A. meet, did a lot of work in a short time while in Toronto the other day. Speaking of the prospects he said: "Well it is hard to tell, but I think we're quite safe. If Ottawa does get the meet we will give our visitors a fine time. Peterboro thinks Ottawa has a much chance for the meet as a man running the Chaudiere in a birch bark canoe. They may be right at that; time alone will tell.

Proposed Electric Railway

Yesterday Mayor Hayden received a letter from Mr. H. Calcutt, urging his worship to advocate an electric line of railway to Gore's Landing and Harwood. We did not learn what the Mayor's intention was in the matter, but we think hardly good that there is a land and building boom in Cobourg that our people have much time to think of building an electric railway to the above villages. Our old friend Calcutt is a hustler for many enterprises, but this is a poor season for electric roads building to the north.—Cobourg Post.

New Market Regulations

Mr. Baple, the new market clerk, enters upon his duties on Friday morning. He will be assisted for the present by Mr. R. Green, the retiring clerk. The new regulations require that all meat and potatoes must be weighed. There is also a regulation governing hucksters. Mr. Baple is confident, not without reason, that the price of single rigs have been reduced from ten cents to five cents each, it will be more than offset by the clause making it compulsory to have meat and potatoes weighed on the public scales. Vendors are notified that the regulation will be strictly enforced.

Railway Notes

The Canadian Pacific Railway received two more new engines last night at Toronto. They will be placed on the Ontario and Quebec division when put together.

—During the month of February 175 accidents occurred on the railroads in the United States, of which 76 were collisions, 27 derailments, and two other accidents. Twenty-seven persons were killed and 103 injured.

The superintendent of every division of the Grand Trunk Railway is today meeting General Manager Hays and General Superintendent McGuigan at Montreal. The object of the conference is to compare notes and arrange plans for the future.

—Freight business on this part of the division has been exceptionally dull of late, and the men are grumbling. The crews of the mixed trains are being changed almost daily in order to give idle men their share of the small business being done.—Lindsay Post.

Funeral of the Late Mr. Wm. Wand

The funeral of the late Mr. Wm. Wand, of Ashburnham, took place at Little Lake Cemetery yesterday afternoon, when a large number of friends assembled to pay their tribute of respect to a departed worthy. The Lansdowne Lodge, No. 25, of the Sons of England, of which Mr. Wand was an active member, was represented by Mr. A. Bridgwater, president, and about thirty brethren. Rev. J. Moore, of the Marl Street Methodist Church, performed that part of the burial service which took place at the family residence, and Rev. Herbert Symonds, chaplain of the Lansdowne Lodge, conducted the impressive ceremony at the grave according to the ritual of the Sons of England.

Wedding Bells

A very pretty wedding took place at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. Trotter, when Miss Hattie Fredenburg was united in the holy bonds to Mr. Fred Sherwood. The handsome bride was attired in a dress of fawn serge trimmed with silk, chiffon and pearl trimming and carried a bouquet of pink roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Linda Trotter, looked very charming in a dress of fawn serge trimmed with silk and chiffon; she carried a bouquet of pink roses. Mr. Lorne Sherwood assisted the groom. Rev. J. Trotter officiated and the knot. After the wedding ceremony about forty of the bride's friends sat down to an elegant wedding supper. The bride received a number of beautiful and costly presents. Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood left on the four o'clock train for Winnipeg, where they will reside.

The Curtain Was Down

A very funny incident occurred while the St. John's Cabin Company were giving a matinee in Brantford's Opera House. It appeared that a party of young fellows from the country were in town enjoying the lights. They came along to the opera house just after the band had finished playing in front of the building. "St. John's go in," said one.

"Better see how much it is first," said another.

After acquiring the price of admission they decided to send one of the party inside to see whether it was good enough or not. After remaining for some time the delegate remarked:

"How is it?" asked one.

"No good. A lot of fellows fiddling in front of a big picture." Come on.

Bicycle Notes

The Waterloo bicycle club will support Peterborough in their endeavor to secure the C.W.A. meet.

The Prince of Wales is energetically learning bicycle riding at the Riviera, accompanied by an instructor and an equerry.

It is proposed to bring the Canadian Wheelman, now published in Simcoe, to Toronto, and float a company, with a capital of $20,000 to operate it. It is said that gentlemen of prominence in Toronto and other parts of the province are ready to subscribe the necessary capital. Conferences of those interested have been going on quietly for some days, and it is stated the proposed move is not at all unlikely to be carried out.

Secretary Hal B. Donly is spoken of as manager of the company.

Peterborough Party: off to the Klondike

A big crowd assembled at the C.P.R. station yesterday afternoon to witness the departure of Mr. Clark's party by the 2:45 Klondike flyer. The members of the party, whose pioneer, Mr. Chas. Goodman, left a couple of weeks ago, are Messrs. Sam Munro and P. M. Clark, formerly of the Consolidated Milling Co., Mr. Ed. Neill, of Peterborough, formerly manager of Neill's boot and shoe store at Lindsay, Mr. F. S. Harrison, of Warkworth, Mr. Wm. Douglas, M.D., of Chatham, and the two Messrs. Evers, formerly of Dakota, sons of Mr. Wm. Evers, 168 Antiristreet. They will remain in Vancouver for eight or ten days before taking passage to Dyea. They will then make the perilous journey to the Yukon, descended the Yukon as far as the Stewart River where they will make their headquarters and where they expect to do most of their prospecting. The Times wishes them luck.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 30, 1898

PEACE OR WAR?

This week will probably decide the question of peace or war. The abstract of the Maine report, which has every appearance of authenticity, looks ominous. It becomes a question now of Spain's resistance or compliance. Thus far the purpose of the United States administration evidently has been to make so great a display of force that Spain will see the folly of attempting resistance to any reasonable and humane demands.

To this end the $50,000,000 appropriation was asked for. Agents were sent abroad to buy foreign warships, and if they have not succeeded in buying many, they have, at least, demonstrated that the United States is willing to buy and has the money to pay for any and all which may be for sale. In further pursuance of this design, the ships of the United States Navy have been gradually concentrated in home waters. The South Atlantic squadron has been brought by slow stages to Key West to add its three ships to the splendid force already assembled there and at the Dry Tortugas; and a fleet has been assembled within a few hours' sail of Cuba so strong that the Spanish ships in Cuban waters could not hope to face it. At the same time America has demonstrated that she has ships enough left to form a flying squadron for operations against any stray cruisers or commercial vessels of the enemy, and that, with all these means of offensive warfare she would still leave enough strong fighting ships along her own coast to co-operate with the shore batteries in making her seaports safe.

In addition to this America has concentrated the Asiatic squadron of three ships at Hong Kong, whence it can attack the Spanish possessions in the Pacific.

The pressure of the naval men at present is apparently being exerted to induce immediate hostilities on account of the menace conveyed by the dispatch of the torpedo flotilla to Cuba. The Army and Navy Journal, usually a Conservative paper, in an editorial article on Saturday urged that cruisers should be dispatched at once to stop those torpedo vessels, whether the United States would be technically right or not.

To the tactician the opportunity now afforded of striking Spain while her forces are divided is naturally tempting. It would be an easy matter for the fleet at Key West to occupy the attention of the Spanish ships now in Cuban waters, while the fleet at Hampton Roads and League Island intercepts the torpedo flotilla and destroys it. The Torpedo-boats have but small coal capacity and, if attacked by cruisers in mid-ocean, would stand little chance of escaping or of making any serious defense. There is no occasion for any special alarm, however, even if the torpedo flotilla reaches Cuba in safety, and the dispatch of those vessels does not in itself constitute a sufficient pretext for rebeginning war. At best they are dangerous only when they can surprise an enemy. They are unarmored, their speed alone being relied on for defense. While a cruiser could not catch a torpedo boat unless it was short of coal, a torpedo boat could not in the open advance within range of a cruiser's guns without being blown to pieces.

This is the last day for entering protests.

March struggled hard to assert herself, but in vain.

The root of all evil does not necessarily mean an all-Canadian route.

If the rate war last another week Easter travel this year should be a record breaker.

It looks as if American citizens who are pining for adventure needn't go to the Klondike this spring.

There is to be no protest in West Peterborough, so that Mr. Stratton retains his seat. This is as it should be.

The Galt Reporter asks: Has John Chardon made you good? The Times guesses he has made himself pretty sick.

The Liberals after all appeared to have whacked Whitney. The Globe man claims a majority for Hardy of eight.

If April showers are not a greater success than the March winds have been umbrellas will be at a discount next month.

We hear that spiritualism has so far advanced in Belleville that the Sun of that city is advocating a telephone connection with the cemetery.

If the C.W.A. knows what is good for itself, the provincial meet will be at Peterborough this year. And what's more, it's coming here too.

Sixty-eight per cent. of the Spanish people cannot read, and they are in luck if the Spanish papers are as crazy as some of our American contemporaries.

"A century on a chainless," is the apparently anachronistic line commencing a magazine advertisement. As the chainless wheel saw this year, a century on one must be accepted as another demonstration of the annihilation, by modern invention, etc.

The Government has decided not to grant a bonus on butter exported. Their view is that Canadian butter can, with the improved facilities for making and transporting it, make its way on the English market. There seems no reason why it should not do so. At any rate the proposed bonus of one cent would not be likely to accomplish it.

An anonymous correspondent in a local contemporary asks which is grammatically correct: "I feel as if I were frozen," or "I feel as though I were frozen." It would be natural for the late Conservative candidate to have propounded such a question, as everybody knows that he received a chill on the night of March 1st that congealed everything within his reach.

Must we alter our views in regard to Heaven. Mr. Lucy, the Parliamentary correspondent of the London daily News informs the readers of that journal that a member of the House of Commons, who had written to make enquiry about the health of an acquaintance, received the following answer: "In reply to your kind letter to hand this morning, I have to inform you of the unpleasant news that our dear brother has passed from earth to Heaven."

A contemporary relates that Alex. Pirie, the defeated candidate in North Wentworth says he came out of the contest with an old pair of breeches and his self-respect. We can easily understand Mr. Pirie failing to get rid of his self-respect—who so close to Hamilton would need such an article? But couldn't Mr. Pirie have turned his breeches into another vote or two? He might not then have been left out in the cold with such scanty attire.

The causes of the pretexts for divorce are numerous, but there is something decidedly novel in the plea on which a Sioux City, Iowa, Judge has just granted a divorce to a young woman of that town. It took this woman just three years to learn that she "had married the wrong man." It appears that she had wedded an utter stranger, whose name she did not know, whereas the man whom she had been betrothed never had left his home in Pennsylvania.

A Terrible Case of Inflammatory Rheumatism Permanently Cured

THIS IS THE SEASON WHEN PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND DOES ITS LIFE SAVING WORK

Scores of the best people in and around Roston Pond, P.Q., know of Mr. Morissette's wonderful cure by Paine's Celery Compound at a time when the best doctors said he would surely die.

The almost miraculous cure has made a deep impression on the minds of the thoughtful and earnest in the district referred to. Since Mr. Morissette's rescue from death, several victories have been scored by Paine's Celery Compound in Roston Pond, and to-day it is safe to say that Paine's Celery Compound is the chosen medicine of all the sick in that quiet country town, and in every case is giving grand results. Mr. Morissette writes as follows:

"Gentlemen,—Having been given up to die some time ago by some of the best doctors of the United States, I came to Canada last autumn terribly ill, and had lost all hope. Suffering agonies from inflammatory rheumatism, I was strongly urged to use Paine's Celery Compound. I gave it a trial as recommended, and the first bottle did me as much good. I continued with the medicine until I had used seven bottles, when I found myself perfectly cured; indeed, I never felt better in all my life than at present.

I use every possible means to tell others of Paine's Celery Compound, and will always recommend it to those who will always recommend it to those troubled with rheumatism.

MONTREAL WILL FIGHT

OBJECTS TO THE REMOVAL OF G. T. R. OFFICES TO TORONTO.

(Special to the Times.)

MONTREAL, March 30.—Toronto will not be allowed to secure the head offices of the Grand Trunk without determined opposition on the part of Montreal. A very large amount of public interest has been aroused by Mr. Arthur White's statement and an earnest effort is to be made to preserve to the head of ocean navigation the head offices of the old Canadian Railway.

Rev. Dr. Ker, rector of Grace Church, at Point St. Charles, the congregation of which is nearly all made up of employees of the Grand Trunk, expressed the hope that the people of Montreal would wake up sufficiently to their own interests to prevent Toronto stealing a march on them. It would be a bad day if Montreal of the Grand Trunk offices were moved away.

TWO CONFERENCES

RATE WAR MEETINGS AT BUFFALO AND AT MONTREAL.

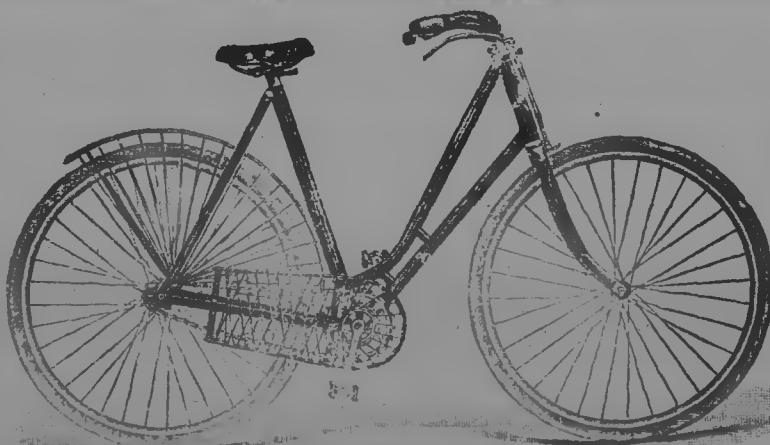

(Special to the Times.)

TORONTO, March 28.—Mr. D. W. McNicoll, general passenger agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway is in this city to-day on his way to Buffalo to attend the conference to-morrow as to the rate war. To-day there does not seem to be much probability of the rate-cutting being suspended pending the decision of this prospective arbitration.

A Grand Trunk official expressed the opinion this morning that the present rate war would ultimately result in a permanent rate of two cents a mile. This is supported by the recent increase in total receipts, showing that the travel caused by cut rates more than recouped the roads for the reductions.

All the superintendents of divisions on the Grand Trunk are at Montreal to-day in conference.

A WIDOW AFTER GOLD

SHE IS WITH A SWELL PARTY OF ENGLISH KLONDIKERS.

Special to the Times.
Vancouver, B. C., March 30.—Mrs. Gladys Egerton, a charming young English widow, just arrived here from London, en route to Klondike, quickly makes her presence known.

She is going north with a party of swell Englishmen, and this morning she had James Stanfield, leader of the party, wrestled on a breach of contract. Mrs. Egerton believed Stanfield wanted to give her the go-by. However, the matter was amicably settled, and the party will leave on the Ning Chow.

Mrs. Egerton, a professional nurse, aided sufferers from Jameson's raid at Johannesburg. She intends to mine in Klondike, and will don masculine attire when she reaches Wrangell.

INTEREST RATE CUT

THE RATE PAID BY THE POSTAL SAVINGS BANK TO BE REDUCED

Special to the Times.

OTTAWA, March 30.—The following telegram has been received from M. V. McInnes, immigration agent at Detroit, by the Department of the Interior:

"One carload of settlers and two cars of stock and effects left here to-day." The telegram is dated yesterday.

Hon. J. I. Tarte has been confined to his room since Sunday.

The Government has decided to reduce the interest in the Government Savings Bank from 3 per cent. to 2 1/2 per cent. The reason for this is principally due to the fact that money can be borrowed for about this amount, and therefore the Government generally tries to keep the interest at the amount of which money can be obtained.

A New Danger.

Little Elmer Dunk (rushing in)—Oh, ma, there is a mixed old man out by the gate who says he is a Klondyke sufferer! Shall I let the dog loose?

Mrs. Dunk—No, indeed! They eat dogs up there, and your father paid ten dollars for Watch.

One Blessing.

Lanks (the petulant boarder)—Klondyke! Klondyke! That's all we hear at the table, morning, noon and night!

Tubman (the grim boarder)—Oh, well, it's not so bad as it might be. It has shut off that confounded bicycle talk for a while, at least.

Rush Stock.

The selection and steady use of the best of even common scrub stock will lead to improvement.

Mother—Tommy, if you are not good, I'll send you to bed without your supper.

Tommy—What you gain? to have for supper?

THE MISSING LINNET

as, as a sou'wester, black niggers'ud tackle a British man-o-war."

Morrissey laughed, so did Bramble, and did the solitary midshipman who was lying back eating bananas almost as fast as the two brown girls could skin them and put them into his mouth.

As Hicks, which was the boatswain's name, finished sniggering in respectful sympathy a sound of shooting reached them from shoreward. A burst of the white house, backed by the patch of scarlet, in the bright sunlight stood a man from whose extended arms flashed forth fire and smoke into a dense crowd of natives, between whom and the trader, for it was he, so thickly flew the spears that they seemed but one continuous mass. Suddenly they saw him fall to his knees, the firing ceased and it was as if a brown wave had rolled over the spot.

With a roar the boatswain sprang forward only to be met at the break of the little poop by Tuifalu and cleft so cleanly by a single blow from a nine pound American ax that a half of his head fell sideways on to each shoulder. Forth he fell, he stood upright, then slowly his legs gave way, and he doubled up all in a heap over the port-hatch—cask—the one the salt pork was kept in.

Almost simultaneously the 30 men who composed the crew, and who were almost all on deck, were butchered. Those below speedily shared the same fate. The supporters in blood.

At the words of Tuifalu, much later on: "The sea was red and the ship was red. Red was everything in our sight, yea, even the very air we breathed was red. A great slaughter, a very great slaughter of white men, the like of which was never known in the world before."

Meanwhile after the first long wail of despairing incredulity and one solitary exclamation of "My God!" from Morrissey, the three turned to fly toward the companionway. But the room of the unprepared in those lands, even to the present day, was upon him. At the sound of the first shot the two native women had sprung on to the awning and rapidly cut the stops and earings, so that before the three officers could reach the door down came the big heavy awning of stout canvas right on the top of them. Yelling like fiends, the children of treachery rushed aft, stabbing frantically with their spears and beating with their shark toothed swords at the sharply outlined bodies beneath until the bleached canvas began to show great patches of red, and all movement ceased.

To the westward, beyond the ever sounding circle of the surf glowing rosy in the rays of the lowering sun, that same evening there have in sight a smaller hoover making direct for the entrance in the reef.

Then Tuifalu's brains went to work again in savage wise, and very quickly the awning was reassembled, all signs of confusion cleared away and sundry bodies placed in position about the decks, some apparently watching the approaching vessel as they leaned over the bulwarks, one sitting on the rail with a fishing line between his fingers and aft the propped poor Morrissey against the hood of the companion and put his telescopes under his arm as they had seen him stand many a time.

Nor ashore were they idle. While some beat welcoming tamaras others on the stars and stripes up to the top of the flagstaff that stood before the dead trader's house. Ruder than ever in the sunset glowed the scarlet hibiscus. And as the Yap schooner drew slowly in and let go her anchor they set off with songs and flowers and boarded her. Rendered totally unsuspecting by the presence of Linnet, they found the little fore and aft easy conquest. The Yap men who comprised the crew at once took to the water and were killed there. The two white skipper and mate, were cut down on the quarter-deck.

Here, indeed, was an embarrassment of riches, and the whole group was in a ferment of pleasurable excitement. Two ships full of untold treasure and as much "long pig" as would furnish quite a week of cannibal feasting.

But old Tuifalu was not altogether easy in his mind. Once when only a strip of the remembered people had killed and eaten a white trader—a man like this last one—and thought so much about it. Then, one fine morning, a big, a very big canoe appeared and vomited fire and smoke and things that screamed as they flew, and when they burst annihilated huts and canoes and plantations.

Certainly only a few very old people were killed, because the whole tribe fell inland. But it was not pleasant on returning to find their village in ashes, canoes in splinters and the whole of the seaborne crops ruined.

There was, he recollected, much argument over the matter. "The anger of the gods," at last said the priests who lived in the temple where row upon row shone the long array of polished bowls of tusks. But even then Tuifalu had doubts.

He doubted more when he saw the Linnet and heard the big gun fired. Weeks of close communion with the whites had taught him a great deal. As we have seen, he profited, and the big gun had been dumb so long.

Also where was the other big canoe—the one of many moons ago? Might it not return at any minute with guns that were not dumb? Therefore Tuifalu stopped the feasting and prepared to get rid of the two vessels, casting uneasy glances the while seaward.

The Yap schooner, after taking out most of her cargo, he ran ashore and set fire to. And as the people watched her burning she blew to atoms, and a few were killed and many grievously wounded.

Keg's powder had, in some sort, worked a revenge. "The anger of the gods," said the wise men again. But Tuifalu knew better. It, however, effectually stopped him from serving the Linnet in the same fashion. Otherwise he would have burned her where she lay. As it was he concluded to try to round to a secluded inlet that he knew of, and there gradually break her up.

One matter puzzled him. It was how to weigh her anchor. The Yap schooner's ground tackle had been merely a coil of rope. One can cut the like easily, but not a heavy chain cable.

So Tuifalu had to work his strains once more. First he tried fair pulling, but the whole strength of the group, or as many as could get hold, was unable to move the anchor. He and his shade twice sent the sailors—those men now dead and digested—walking round the flat topped thing to the sound of music until the big iron hook came up from the sea bottom. Was it the music or the walking round and round? Tuifalu pondered the matter deeply. And the result was that one day, shipping the bars and seating himself on top of the captain with an instrument made out of one of Morrissey's thigh bones, he struck up, while his naked cannibals ran merrily round and round to the clunk of the pawls and the barbarous squeaking of the savage flute.

But, alas, the great hook fast in its coil bed below there, gave no sign of ascending. The necessity of taking the cable to the capstan before commencing operations had never been explained to the untutored ones.

So the old chief was had to beat, and presently seeing the futility of this thing, he began to put out chain, instead of trying to get it in, with the result that the man-o-war schooner nearly drifted into the surf with the set of the ebb tide. So crowded were curious spectators that she looked more like a huge mass of bees blown out to sea at swarming time than a ship.

And as this great floating mass lay just in front of the gap in the reef, with 100 fathoms of chain surging and gurgling behind her over sea bottom hills and gullies, suddenly came on to blow the norwester as it always blows at Suvaia—a first a few premonitory puffs roaring hollow down the green declivities of the island, and then a wild and shake of wind that bends the palms and shakes their stately head like plumes, or a jolting hearse.

It caught the Linnet and filled her topsail and topgallant sail, belling them out to the full slack of their loose sheets, it filled the big foremast, making a great and tear and jerk aloft tack and sheet block and bring them crashing and rattling down on the natives' heads, and heeling the Linnet over till the water foamed across the main hatch slewing her head round till it pointed straight for the entrance in the reef, against which the surf now broke in thunder.

Then, somewhere in the great length of chain dragging across the coral, the inevitable weakest link snapped, the yards braced themselves to the wind, and, like a racer, the Linnet, black with her awnings of yelling cannibals, darted through the gap and reeled away into the fiery heat of the sun. And as the sun set the wind blew stronger and more strongly, and the Linnet, with all her canvas forlorn, struggled and staggered through the reef rising sea and the darkness, her shaggy spars creaking and working spray and spindrift hissing over her decks, where, to make standing room even, so crowded they were, the stronger fought with a weak and hurled them overboard—women and children first. And on top of the combatants came down those who had been aloft, so that as soon as ever a little space was made the struggle commenced again—"This time," as Tuifalu remarked later, "truly the anger of the gods."

Ind us course—which meant in this case 12 months—a big man-o-war, with many men and guns, came along with admiralty orders to find the Linnet and pay her men off and lay her up. But she was already laid up, and for weeks the newcomer searched for her missing sister, learning no tidings—only vague lies and legends, out of which nothing could be made, sending her hither and thither on wild goose chases. So at last the big ship relinquished her quest and left, her captain wishing to spend the hot month in Hobart town.

Twice 12 months, and one day a labor vessel, cruising speculatively, happened to visit a certain inlet which stands quite solitary amid a thousand leagues of ocean and almost exactly on the line. On the admiralty charts you may now see it marked as "Lonely Island." From only a few miles away so low is it as to appear merely a clump of tall reeds growing out of the water, and there is no encircling reef.

Presently, as the boat's crew of the blackbird landed, straggling about, out at once, in the midst of the thick bush, the mounds of a sort of natural dry dock, formed by a deep depression in the rock. And in it, nearly upright, lay the wreck of a vessel with only her lower masts standing. Flakes of rotten timber had fallen from her sides, and out of the rot grew great purple fungi and tall coarse grasses. Through the upper deck planking a young palm had thrust its way, growing until the tender green fronds shaded a mass of rusty iron that, only prevented from falling into the hold by the stout stringers of her turntable, gaped all awry at the graceful arch overhead.

As the seamen moved about, full of curiosity, they became aware of many skeletons scattered around amid a store of native weapons.

And one, venturing on to the quaking deck and wrenching off the bell from its woodwork and bringing it away, discovered thereon, after some cleansing, the inscription "H.M.S. Linnet," with the date of her building, a year which no man there could look back to, for she was a very old ship.

And as they marvelled among themselves, having by this, like most wanderers about the Pacific islands, heard of the mystery of the total disappearance of the queen's ship, out from the bush on all fours crawled, mother naked, an old man, very feeble, and whose hair and beard were snow white. It was Tuifalu. And after they got him on board he lived just long enough to tell the story that I have here set down, and of how at last, after being driven during four days and nights before a raging hurricane, the Linnet was cast high and dry by a big wave upon the little island, with only 30 survivors of the great crowd she had borne away with her, and how her boats being all gone these had made a raft and three times attempted in vain to leave the island, a storm arising each time and blowing them back again, and of how they fought and killed and fed on one another, and of how, after many moons, by reason of his greater cunning, Tuifalu was left alone, existing as best he might on fruit and fish.

"Missing," tersely says the "Navy List" of that day opposite the Linnet's name. "Missing. No information."

"This time truly, by the anger of the gods," said Tuifalu, with his last breath having finished his story.

Morning Times

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 31, 1898

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

A Small Gold Mine
Kidd's boat and mine—405 George St.—a gold mine for those who require good footwear cheap.

A Warning
The person or persons responsible for the placement of a couple of new light telegraphs on private boards in the town will have to look out. Mr. Stocker is determined to make an example of the first offender detected.

Bought at 50c. on the 5
Kidd, the booter, is still selling boots and shoes that cost 50c. on the 5 away below cost. 405 George Street.

Going to the North-West
Mr. J. Fred Davidson left town yesterday afternoon for Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, N.W.T., where he proposes entering into the ranching business. He takes with him two cars of thoroughbred pedigree, Shorthorn bulls and heifers.

Book Lost
Lost, on Saturday night last, a large pocket book, containing a number of letters and a note, drawn in favor of Mr. A. Carter for $100. The finder will oblige by leaving it at the Times Office.

Advertising Boom
Noisy was the first man to advertise. He advertised the flood and it came through all right. The fellow who laughed at the advertising got drowned, and it served them right. Ever since Noah's time the advertiser has been prospering, while the other fellow is being swallowed up in a flood of disaster.

Thankless Corporations
The preventing of a railway disaster by the timely discovery of a broken rail and the stopping of the approaching train, a locomotive engineer received a reward of two marks. Mr. G. E. Whitten, Artist, while living in Harris some years ago, happened to discover a heavy obstruction on the track, which would have caused death and disaster, which he was just in time to prevent by signalling the train. He was not even thanked by the railway people.

St. Peter's Fishes
Symptoms—Moisture intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate and become very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Lyman Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents.

Fresh Strawberries, 25 cents a box. J. B. Oke, 418 George St.

Against Saloons
The temperance people of the town, it is said, intend taking action in regard to the applications for saloon licenses which have been made to the Licensing Commissioners. They will strenuously oppose the granting of the same. As soon as the applications are advertised, as the law requires, it is the intention of the local committee to call a meeting of temperance workers at once, we believe.

Lecture at St. John's
Last night's service at St. John's Church was well attended. The pulpit was occupied by Rev. Professor Cayley, of Trinity University, Toronto, who lectured on "The teaching Church—St. Augustine." The reverend gentleman dwelt mainly upon St. Augustine's teaching upon the power of man as a free agent—the doctrine that to a certain extent and within certain limits man is master of his own destiny.

How to Cure All Skin Diseases
Simply apply "Swayne's Ointment." No internal medicine required. Cures leprosy, eczema, itch, all eruptions of the face, hands, nose, &c., leaving the skin clear, white and healthy. Its great healing and curative powers are possessed by no other remedy. Ask your druggist for Swayne's Ointment. Lyman, Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents. Avoid substitutes.

Railway Notes
—The 10.10 train from Belleville, in charge of Conductor J. Britton, broke in two Monday evening on the railway bridge, Lindsay, owing to the snapping of a coupling pin.
—Railway men say that a lot of ballasting will have to be done on this division this season, as very little has been done for some years. The Midland, Cobourg, and Haliburton branches are said to be particularly in need of attention.

The C. W. A. Meet
Ottawa Citizen: Mr. George P. Murphy, who passed through Toronto on Saturday, met Mr. J. P. Dixon, who is up west in the interests of the O. A. A. C. Mr. Dixon is meeting with fair success, but sympathy for Peterborough is spoiling a lot of votes that would otherwise be cast in favor of Ottawa. Mr. Dixon will this week canvass Hamilton, Simcoe, Eltham and the other western towns.

Fire Sale at Mason's
The recent fire at E. F. Mason & Co.'s has had the effect of slightly damaging by smoke the immense stock of groceries and provisions carried by this firm, and in order to facilitate renovation and make room for new goods, a clearing sale has been inaugurated and is now in full swing. Everything must go, and at almost your own price. Don't procrastinate! Call to-day!

Insurance Cases at Lindsay Settled
At the concluding day of the Lindsay Assizes, the insurance cases of Robinson against the Waterloo Mutual and the London Lancashire were settled among the parties, and the trial discontinued. Mr. Nesbitt, plaintiff, Mr. E. F. Robinson, Q. C., and Mr. Clements for defendant. Robert Muir was tried on the charge of theft, convicted and sentenced to two years. Mr. Huyske for Crown, Mr. O'Connor for prisoner. This closed the business of the court.

Navigation Notes
The steamer Ellipse returned on Tuesday from the south. She left yesterday to bring up a load of hogs for the Matthews Company.
Spring is certainly with us—crocuses are in bloom in Dr. McAlpine's garden, and Capt. Lane steered the Maple Leaf into port this morning with a crowd of Bobcaygeon people on board. The ice moved out yesterday, just 24 days ahead of last year. The Esquimaux will commence her regular trips on Monday.

A Mystery no Longer
Miss Esther Young, the lady who mysteriously disappeared from town on Monday, has been found wandering in the country. She was traced through North Monaghan and discovered at Springfield. Her two brothers—Messrs. William Young, of Rockdale, and Daniel Young, of Rush Point—brought her to Peterborough early yesterday morning, and handed her again by the noon train for Havelock. They have persuaded her to return home to Belmont.

Wedding Bells
On the 23rd inst. at Mossomin, Assn., John Elmhirst, son of F. Elmhirst, well known in Peterborough county, was united in marriage to Miss Loretta Nelson, step-daughter to Mr. J. W. Stratford. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. Williams, rector of St. Albans, and brother-in-law to the bridegroom. The happy couple have the best wishes of the people in their neighborhood by whom they are both highly esteemed.—Carter's (Man.) News.

A Farmer's Loss
As a farmer was proceeding home yesterday, and when crossing the track at the C.P.R. station, an engine suddenly moved forward. The farmer urged on his horse and jumped from the track, losing control of the team. The horse bolted, and ran the wagon against a telegraph pole in front of Matthews' pork-packing factory, breaking the whistles. The animals, breaking loose from one another, took a different direction at Lake street and vanished. Though lost to sight, they are to memory dear.

Watch for this Court
The astronomers of the University of California have completed their computation of the comet discovered Sunday morning by Professor Perrine of the Lick Observatory, and, according to them, it will become brighter and brighter and remain in sight for some time. It is now travelling towards the earth at the rate of 1,000,000 miles a day. For the next two weeks it will continue to move north-easterly at the rate of one degree a day north as well as east. It is visible about 4 o'clock in the morning.

Royal Templars are at War
Royal Templars are not a happy family just now, and if present indications go for anything it will be a good while before they are all pulling together in the cause of cold water. The trouble has resulted in great changes, the latest being the dismissal of Editor Wrigley from the editorial management of the Templar newspaper at Hamilton. Mr. Wrigley was notified yesterday that his services would be dispensed with at once, and he was given a check for $100 to pay him for this month's work.—London Times.

A Flourishing Industry
It is a wonderful fact that the proportion of the apple tree industry has reached along the north shore of Lake Ontario. The ports of Brighton and Colborne and Brighton, but Colborne from the three localities there have been shipped to the English market as follows: In October, November and December, 8,758 barrels valued at $27,666.2; and in January and February, 1897, 2,482 barrels valued at $9,977. The bulk of these shipments are from Colborne and Brighton, but Colborne and contributed a large quota as well. Apples were also shipped to the American and Canadian markets, so that the whole output must be tremendous. The apples being shipped during March have been as heavy as during January and February.—Sentinel-Star.

Our Local Militia
From the recently issued report of the Chief Engineer for the Department of Militia and Defence, we gather that the following works have been carried out locally in Military District No. 3 during the last official year:
Amherstham.—The drill hall roof repairs were repaired.
Belleville.—General repairs were made at the drill hall. A new rifle range was under construction.
Peterborough.—The roof of the drill hall was repaired and strengthened.
Colborne.—A new platform for a 62 pr. gun was erected at the gun shed, and the fence was moved.
Port Hope.—General repairs were made at the drill hall.

Battalion Orders
Orders by Lieut.-Col. R. W. Bell, commanding the 5th Battalion of Infantry, Peterborough, dated 29th March, No. 1.—Detail of duty for week ending Saturday, April 9th:
Officer for the week, Capt. Hill, next for duty Capt. Stevens.
Bugler for the week, Bugler Green, next for duty, Bugler Galley.
No. 2.—Lieut. A. L. LeFevre, is temporarily detailed to the 1st company.
No. 3.—The Battalion will march out with bugle band, ambulance corps and pioneers, on Tuesday evening, April 5th.

By order,
H. A. MORROW,
Capt. and Adj.

Headquarters, Peterborough, March 29, 1898.
The Easter Hilde
We learn from a Peterborough moderate that the bride dress that will be worn by the bride on Easter Sunday, from that worn on previous Easters. Several entirely new models have come over from Paris, and these differ greatly from those of the previous spring.

For example, take this bride's dress of ivory white tulle. The skirt is of satin, fitting very tight around the hips and billowing out very full about the foot. The waist is entirely of white chiffon over satin. It is drawn close at the belt line without the suspicion of a blouse.
The dress is trimmed profusely with Duchesse lace. The lace, coming from the under-arm seams, forms a bilet in front. It is knotted at the bust, and from there falls to the skirt, where it is looped in two places with orange blossoms.
The veil of white tulle is gathered under a bunch of orange blossoms.

Talk About Hens
One of our local poultry fanciers yesterday morning called our attention to an American poultry journal, carrying a notice of a mammoth incubator and boiler plant that has recently been put in by a Sidney, Ohio, man who has invested no less than $60,000 in the purchase of a 140-acre farm and the erection upon it of a one and one-half mile covered building, one of the largest of its kind in the world, 320 feet long, and still another 500 feet long and 40 wide. The profit on the investment thus far has netted $25,000 per annum, which the owner hopes shortly to increase by $100,000 or $200,000. He has thirty eggs in the incubator, and they are hatching, namely, 300 to-day in one machine, 600 to-morrow in the next machine and so on, making an average of 450 eggs placed in incubators every day in the year. When these fowls, which are called broilers, attain the age of 90 days they are shipped alive to commission merchants who have contracted to take the output, which is found to be 250 broilers every day in the year. Three thousand laying hens are kept on the premises, 2,400 of them being leghorns, brown and white, and the balance Plymouth Rocks. We were compelled to "choke off" the enthusiast at this point, or our columns would have been filled with "cackle."

LESSONS OF THE FLOWERS

They are the Great Teachers, and speak a Universal Language
"Nothing teaches us so much in this world as flowers if we will only watch them. Understand the messages they exhibit and profit by them," writes Edward W. Bok in the April Ladies' Home Journal. "I wish every body on this earth might love flowers. (Flowers can do so much for us men or women.) No once can raise flowers, but among them, love them, and not be better for their influence. By their birth they show us how, out of things hard, out of disappointment and failure, by the overcoming of obstacles and by the bending to difficult tasks, creep forth the most beautiful results. By their cultivation they show how different natures need different treatment. By the manner in which they refuse to thrive near weeds they teach the clearest lesson of human association, and show that sin is an intrusion in this world. We learn the greatest lesson that while the most gorgeous flowers appeal to our admiration, we love the fragrant ones the best. Every lesson, every pleasure, we can learn and derive from these silent messengers of the earth. The flowers speak a universal language; they adapt themselves to grave or gay. A flower is never misunderstood. We associate flowers with all the joyous seasons of our lives as well. Flowers often speak to us when our own words seem powerless to express what we really mean. They are the daintiest bits of God's handiwork. They call to us to care for them; to love them, rewarding us with prodigality when we respond to their beckoning. Their message is Divine. Like an April day, 'shadow and sunshine is life.' But so the flowers grow, and 'we come to June by the way of March.'

ANOTHER CONVERT

The Mail and Empire and Port Hope Guide

Wake-Paper
Toronto Mail and Empire: "The Liberals of Port Hope have made another convert. He is a solid, substantial one who has great weight in the constituency, and one who will attract attention wherever he goes. Moreover, he knows how to preserve a discreet silence on party matters that are shady and will reveal no secrets that have been entrusted to him. The Port Hope Guide, the leading Liberal paper in the locality, makes the following joyful announcement: 'Don't fail to see the greatest scientific curiosity of the 19th century—the Petrified man, once a human being, now a solid mass of stone, weighing 850 pounds, on exhibition here in the Liberal committee-rooms.' The Guide has the following rejoinder: 'The Mail speaks over the fact that we have gained another convert here in Port Hope. We hasten to put our metropolitan com. right—as we can assure the Mail that 'the convert' is only a fossil—petrified—an exact counterpart of the old fossil Tories preserved and exhibited in the Museum. 'Only that and nothing more!' These 'mummies' have periodical 'assays of independence, and by a singular coincidence, never exhibit any of those 'fits' when a Conservative government is in power. It is only when they can grill a bit that they 'hold' their father's feathers and wag their 'jaws,' and the leading old hen of the party was only a few moons since, forcibly ejected from sitting 'on a nest of traitors.' We have almost forgotten the late Hon. Gieseler's remark about a good Indian, and as for our men, that we had it would be extremely apt in regard to a Tory Senator."

Hood's Pills

To the First Robin
Oh! ye little ragged fellow,
With yer rusty breast o' red,
Ye started 'th the spring-time,
But ye got here just ahead;
An' ye found a chillin' welcome
In our frosty atmosphere;
But that doesn't voice our feelin's,
For we're mighty glad ye're here.

Be kinder patient, Robin,
An' linger here awhile;
Ole nature'll be repentin'
An' soon will deign ter smile.
Just spend yer time a-lookin'
For a place ter build yer nest;
Ye're first, an' can be choosin'
The spot as suits ye best.

Don't get discouraged, Robin,
The spring'll be along;
In time ter join the chorus,
Of yer brave an' cheerful song.
We give ye loud encore;
We like yer song, an' want ye
Ter sing it o'er an' o'er.
—Arthur J. Burdick.

The Troopmaster

Cleveland Plain Dealer.
She halted her cavalry squad on the brow of the hill. Raising her pince nez she ran her keen gray eye over the command.
"At-ten-shun!" she shouted.
Her brow clouded.
"Don't cackle," she harshly cried.
Then she briskly added:
"Hats straight!"
Fifty gauntleted hands arose in unison.
"Draw Bat pins!"
Fifty steel lances flashed in air.
"Charge—go!"
And this squad swept down the hill.

PETERBOROUGH, APRIL 1, 1898

THE SECOND CHAMBER

The more one sees of the dangers of extreme partisanship, the greater is the justification for the existence of newspapers whose editors assume an independent position in regard to the two great political parties of the Dominion. We do not say this by way of apology for the independence of the Times, but rather to emphasize the importance of moderation in all things, and to direct attention to the absurdity of the attitude which rabid party journals are wont to take up. Support of a particular party (through attack and this lowers the standard of journalism, and clearly does not commend the approval of the thinking public.

We are led to make these remarks by the crusade commenced by the Toronto Globe against the Senate for having rejected the Government Yukon Bill. Now, as to the merits or demerits of that Bill, we do not propose to express an opinion; but we certainly do feel justified in contrasting the statement of our contemporary that a Second Chamber is neither useful nor necessary, and that its existence is not justified by experience in the history of nations. The laying down of such a rash dictum as the Globe has committed itself to betrays a shocking amount of ignorance, and to express an honest belief in its soundness is to call in question the intelligence of all civilized nations. The necessity of over-riding is as great in matters of legislative enterprise as it is in the ordinary business affairs of the work-a-day world.

We will refresh the Globe's memory on a little detail of recent English history. Mr. Gladstone passed through the English House of Commons an Irish Home Rule Bill. The Bill was rejected by the House of Lords on the ground that a question of so vital importance ought to be submitted to the electorate. What was the result? The country was appealed to, and the action of the Second Chamber was vindicated by the turning out of the Home Rule Government by a majority of no less than 150. Could justification have been more complete? Sir Wilfrid Laurier has a like opportunity of testing the opinion of Canadians upon the Senate's action. If he believes that the Dominion "house of lords" has committed a traitorous act, and if he has confidence in the great importance of the government measure which has been defeated, let him appeal to the country. It is childishness to say that the Senate has committed high treason, and yet take no step to bring about the punishment of the offenders.

And now for April showers and May flowers.

The flush often beats the straight in a political game.

Mr. Stratton will now breathe easier since the protest has been dropped.

Some men are like elevators—they come down in the world every time they go up.

Miss Canada sings: I wear furs and wraps in my mother's house, and sunbonnets in my own.—Hamilton Spectator.

"M-thinks thou doth protest too much." Thus the sensible elector to the protesting members of both political parties.

The Reviewers "the Liberal party has made kindling wood of its promises. And what of that? Did it not make promises to burn?"

Those ardent politicians who have been entering protests are not necessarily spoiling for a fight. They may be merely anxious to fight for spoils.

One fact alone should bind Christendom in a determination that the Chinese shall not be doomed to extinction. What? That? Did it not make promises to burn?

Any scheme for the murder of the Senate which would not surely involve the suicide of the Laurier Government might be gratefully received by Sir Wilfrid.

Fate got in one of her little ironies again when the author of "How to Succeed in Life" appeared in answer to a judgment summons at Marylebone County Court the other day.

Mr. Whitney has been telling a World reporter that the Conservatives will win the bye-elections. It is too soon after the Russell contest for this prophecy to be taken seriously.

A Chicago exchange says that "the Chicago pulpit is eager for war." But there is a difference between the Chicago pulpit and the pulpit in which the Gospel of the Prince of Peace is preached.

Sir Frank Smith was to have carried half the Conservative Senators with him when he crossed the Rubicon, but his stalwart knight went over to the enemy and seems to have carried with him only the clothes he wore.

Signs of the times indicate that for a season at least James Pliny Whitney, M.P.P., must "do sledgehammer work on the outside" of the jungle of office in which A.S. Hardy crouches behind the frail breastworks of his small majority.

The Brantford Courier is crying out for Government protection against the flood. Now Brantford, according to the Courier, has recently had two floods—a flood of water and a flood of money—and the question is suggested, against what flood is the protection asked?

Leamington is evidently going to be a bicyclist's paradise. The magistrates refuse to enforce the local by-law against riding bicycles on the sidewalks. Probably this is one of the ways in which this enterprising town seeks to obtain manufacturers to locate here. Peterborough cyclists will be wheeling their way Leamingtonward, where Chief Roszel will cease from troubling, and the wicked will be at rest.

Peterborough should not be over-confident of securing the G.W.A. seat. The following, sent to the Ottawa Journal, shows that we must put in some hard work between this and Good Friday if we are to succeed: "A letter was received from Mr. J. P. Dixon which states that he is confident Ottawa will carry the majority of the Toronto vote. It all depends on the size of the deputation the O.

A.A. send up. Most of the western delegates will go to Toronto unpledged. The Brantford vote will be about evenly divided between Ottawa and Peterborough, while Hamilton, though unpledged, will vote for Ottawa."

KEENE LIME-JUICE CLUB

On Saturday night about six o'clock the members of the Lime Juice Club formed into line on English's corner and marched in procession to their hall. As the hour for opening was approaching and President Deacocky not being present, the members were discussing as to who would act as president in Deacocky's absence, when a loud rap was heard at the door. The Tyler at once went to the door to ascertain the cause of the alarm. A note was handed to him by a very rough-looking urchin, addressed to Cautious Miller, Cautious at once opened the note and read its contents to the members. It ran as follows: "Dear Brother Cautious, I feel unable to-night to come to the meeting. I feel tough; my hair pulls very hard, and, Oh! I am so thirsty. You know how it is yourself, and don't you forget it. I appoint you to act as president to-night in my place. I trust and hope you will have an enjoyable and profitable meeting. I am, your honorary President, Tom Deacocky."

Cautious Miller now told the members that it was time to open the meeting and he would ask By Dnd Robertson and Bismark Miller to sing the opening ode, Nichey Wier and Tony Mack to join in the chorus. After the ode was sang Cautious sounded the gavel, rose to his feet and addressed the members as follows:

"Brethren, I feel to-night that I am not the right man in the right place, but as I have been the choice of the President I will fill the position the very best I can. It would be presumption on my part to endeavor to give an address, but in order to amuse and interest you I will relate to you an incident which occurred during this week: Hosier Roach and Lightfoot Crunk rode to town on horse back. They got along very nicely going to town, but their journey home at night was not so favorable. The night was very dark, and neither of them could sit very steady in their saddles from the effects of numerous drinks which they indulged in rather freely throughout the day. At a very rough part of the road Hosier fell off his horse and rolled helplessly into the ditch at the roadside. Hosier now shouted to Lightfoot, who was riding a little ahead, to come back and give him a hand for something had fallen off his horse, and he was not sure what it was. Lightfoot drew rein and after rubbing his eyes tried to understand where he was and what had happened. Lightfoot, after coming to his senses, exclaimed: 'I'm thinking, Hosier, that it is yourself that has fallen off.' Hosier then grunted out, 'You don't tell me so! I knew that something had slipped off, but I never thought that it was myself, but still, now, when you mention it, I wouldn't wonder but you are right, for sure enough I felt something give me a very hard bump—it must have been the ground.' Hosier now asked Lightfoot to help him on to his horse, and after many futile and awkward attempts succeeded in regaining his seat in the saddle. Lightfoot, with great difficulty and many a 'whoa' there, stand still, you stupid brute, you succeeded to mount his horse, and was about to resume his journey without noticing that Hosier had got into his seat facing the wrong end of his horse. Hosier now commenced groping around for the reins at what he thought must be the horse's shoulder, but proved to be its tail. Not finding the reins he murmured, 'where in the name of goodness has the confounded reins gone? I can't lay my hands on them anywhere. They must be somewhere around the beast's neck.' So leaning as far over as he could with safety he made a wild sweep at where he thought the horse's head ought to be, but was horrified to find nothing. He then exclaimed, 'goodness, snakes alive! Where on earth is the poor beast's head?' He then shouted to Lightfoot that it was not him but the horse's head that fell off after all, for as sure as death there's nothing here but the poor beast's two shoulders. He then asked Lightfoot to look around for the horse's head, for Lightfoot was now soberer than him. After searching around for some time, imagine his consternation on looking up to see the horse's head sticking out at the hind end instead of the front. 'Mercy on us,' he cried in alarm, 'the beast's head is sticking out at the wrong end—just turn around and see for yourself.' 'Gee Whittaker, shouted Hosier, 'you don't tell me so, is that that wonderful? How in the name of cats and dogs did its head get turned round there? I tell you, Lightfoot, the beast must be bewitched, shifting its head from one end to the other whenever it likes. Lord preserve us, a person never knows how to look for the reins. I could swear to it that the beast's head was in front of me before I fell off, now it sticks up behind me. I tell you what the beast is not to be trusted, too, for the devil is in it. I must however, turn around to humor it till we get home, where we will make a most thorough examination of this queer creature.'"

"How they got home and what was the result of the examination I leave to your imagination and conjecture." Cautious Miller now took a drink of Lime Juice and informed the members that as the evening was far advanced he would now close the meeting by asking Bruin Spiers and Minney Whale Jones to sing the closing ode. After the ode was concluded Cautious declared the meeting closed until next Saturday night.

ANOTHER STILL

REVENUE OFFICER FLOODY MADE A SEIZURE UP WEST.

(Special to the Times.)
Palmerston, March 31.—Preventive Officer Floody, of Toronto, seized a large illicit still last evening, a few miles from here in the township of Minto.

The alleged distiller stated that the machine was used for heating water or hot baths. It is generally rumored that the still has been running for the past twenty years, and that a number of hotels and shops in the neighboring villages have been supplied with the product in the past.

MONTREAL'S NEEDS

URGES GOVERNMENT TO PAY THE INTEREST ON THE HARBOR BONDS.

(Special to the Times.)
Ottawa, March 31.—A Montreal commerce delegation waited on the Government to-day.

They pointed out that in order to carry out the flood protection works necessary the Harbor Commissioners had to construct the new works, but this they were unable to do, unless the Government would undertake to pay the interest on $3,500,000 of the harbor debt, and so enable the commissioners to carry out the works at once without increasing the harbor dues.

Mayor Prefontaine stated that the city had already spent $300,000 on its portion of the work.

Several members of Parliament and Senators spoke in support of the request.

Sir Richard Cartwright promised that he would draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the matter.

'FRISCO FRIGHTENED

A VIOLENT EARTHQUAKE LAST NIGHT DOES CONSIDERABLE DAMAGE.

(Special to the Times.)
San Francisco, March 31.—This city and a portion of the state were shaken at 11.45 last night by a most severe earthquake.

No fatalities have been reported, but many tenements collapsed, and several persons were badly hurt, while many families had narrow escapes.

The shock was apparently confined to Northern California.

Vallejo and Mare Island suffered much damage, the loss at the navy yard being $25,000. The naval hospital was wrecked and the Government saw mill blown down.

From all parts of the city came reports of damage to the buildings and their contents.

FRUIT EXPERIMENTS IN ONTARIO.

Results of the First Year's Work in Testing Varieties.

Already the work of the experiment stations of Ontario is making itself known and appreciated. The first annual report, which has just been published by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, has sixty-four pages of valuable reading matter and numerous tables showing the results of the first year's work in testing varieties. As the secretary says in his letter of transmittal, it would be impossible to have results so extended ready for publication this first year were it not that practical fruit growers of long and careful experience in their various lines have been selected as the experimenters. These men are able to draw lessons from the knowledge gained from years of careful work with that variety of fruit which is the specialty of each. In this way the reports from these gentlemen become most valuable to the country.

Apples.—Mr. W. H. Dempsey, Superintendent of the Hay of Quinte station, speaks well of the Winter St. Lawrence, Redwax and Ontario apples.

He says the Pownall is a large apple and more productive than the King and as good in quality. Of the Ontario he says, "It is one of the most profitable apples we have. My own Ontario apples sold equal to Spys in Montreal." Of the Alexander he says, "This variety is coming more into favor every year as one of the best selling fall apples." Of the Red Astrachan, "It is not desirable to grow here." To the Ben Davis he gives twenty-three marks of value out of a possible forty, and adds that its chief value consists in its long keeping qualities.

Grapes.—Mr. M. Pettit, Superintendent of the Ventworth grape station, gives an interesting table showing the actual production and the various prices per pound which he received for certain varieties in 1904. Thus the Agawam, which was harvested October 22nd, yielded 17½ lbs. of grapes to the vine, of which all but a half pound were first grade; the average selling price was three cents a pound, giving a total income of about fifty cents per vine. The Concord yielded nineteen lbs. per vine and so sold at two cents a pound, or about thirty-eight cents per vine. The Catawba yielded 16½ lbs. and sold at five cents a pound, giving a total of about eighty cents per vine. About thirty varieties of grapes are fully described.

The secretary, in his notes on varieties, speaks favorably of the Victoria grape. He says, "The Victoria, one of the numerous seedlings raised by Mr. B. Miner, of Linton, N. Y., was this year a favorite white grape with me, and I am inclined to think that it will yet take a foremost place among white grapes. The bunches are well shaped, the skin has a fine green lustre and heavy bloom, and the berries are of good size and fair quality. The vine is very productive. By some this grape is called a white Concord."

Peaches.—In his notes on peaches, Mr. W. Hillborn, Superintendent of the South-Western station, says, "Alexander, Amos's June and Early Canada are all practically identical. The four most profitable varieties to grow in this locality have been Alexander, Bernard's Early, Tyhurst Seedling and Hill's Jubilee. The two latter are perhaps the most hardy in fruit buds and give a good crop nearly every season. They are probably the best to plant in sections not well adapted to peach culture. Among the varieties the Niagara is perhaps the most promising. It is one of the Early Crawford type and apparently an improvement on that old favorite. The fruit buds are hardy and the young trees will begin bearing the second year after planting. The fruit is large; skin, bright yellow suffused with red; flesh, deep yellow, of best quality; stone, not as large as that of the Crawford. Its season of ripening is with or just after the Early Crawford. Boyle's Early is another quite new sort in this locality that is very promising. It is the first yellow flesh peach to ripen with me."

Strawberries.—Mr. E. B. Stevenson, strawberry specialist, describes forty-two varieties, placing the Greenville at the head for productiveness and among the best for quality. It is a large crimson berry originating in Ohio. The Haverland he also ranks very high for productiveness. The Timbrell does not ripen evenly, and the Parker Earle rusts and cannot endure the drought. The Woolverton, he says, is well worth growing.

Gooseberries.—Mr. A. Morton, of Brampton, reports upon twenty-six varieties of gooseberries, mostly English.

Mr. S. Spillert, Superintendent of the Simcoe gooseberry station, reports upon ten varieties. He speaks highly of the Pearl. He says, "Take it all around as a medium sized berry, the pearl is hard to beat. More vigorous and with better foliage than the Downing, it is bound to be generally planted. It yielded this year five quarts to the bushel all around. The Champion, a peer to the Pearl in vigor and foliage, is ahead of it apparently in productiveness and size. The berry is a cross of Downing upon a wild Rocky Mountain gooseberry. The fruit station informs me, it is certainly unlike any other gooseberry I have seen in habit of growth and appearance and shape of berry. In quality, I do not think the fruit equal to the Pearl. I may say that by spraying with liver of sulphur, most of the English varieties may be grown successfully, but, in my opinion, our future berry for general cultivation will be along the line of a cross between the so-called American varieties and the English."

Spraying for Fungi and Insects.—That Paris green and kerosene emulsion still remain the leading insecticides, and that Bordeaux mixture is the best remedy for plant diseases, is the experience of the New York station at Geneva. The knapsack sprayer is generally useful, though extensive growers need a machine of greater capacity. The suction pump should always enter the tank at the top, and the pump should be made of brass or be brass lined. Hand pumps should allow the weight of the body to be used on the handle while at work. Vermorel nozzles give a better spray than the disk machines. For spraying potatoes and tomatoes a nozzle is needed which can be lowered between the rows, and directed so as to force the spray up through the vines. The agitator is needed to keep the poisons in solution. The best forms work up and down in an upward tank, like a dash in the old churn. Where the pump piston has a packing this should be carefully oiled. For killing cabbage worms and insects, no liquid has been found equal to dry Paris green applied with a hand duster. Powder guns are useful for applying dry powdered poisons, pyrethrum, tobacco dust and sulphur. Handbo extensions should be used in spraying large trees.

HUMOR OF THE KLONDYKE.

Some Incidents of Real Life That Lighten the Situation.

"I guess the old saying is true that variety is the spice of life," remarked Farmer Lakestraw, looking up from his reading, "but it kind of strikes me that there is a little more of that kind of spice than is just exactly palatable in the newspaper reports from the Klondyke gold fields."

"I have been reading that there is little or no vacant mining land left there, and that there are plenty of rich claims for all comers; statements that the reports of the fabulous finds are grossly exaggerated and that the half has not yet been told of the riches of that new El Dorado; that crime and violence are rampant there, and that the people are open-handed, law-abiding and hospitable; that the winters are prolonged stretches of almost unbearable cold interspersed with terrible blizzards which only the strongest and hardiest can hope to survive; and that the climate, though cold, is extremely healthful, and that when one gets used to it the exceedingly low temperature is felt hardly more than a that only one man in a thousand can make milder degrees of cold would be; that only one man in a thousand can justly hope to win a fortune there even at the risk and probable sacrifice of his health, and that after passing through the clear, pure cold of the winter the gold-seeker emerges in the spring fatter and healthier than at the beginning of the winter, ready to pick up the golden wealth which is his for the taking."

"I like variety in my newspaper reading as a general thing, but I'll have to confess that the Klondyke information that I have been acquiring of late is just a little too spicy for my taste."

His Identity.

"One day," said the returned Klondyke millionaire, "we found a poor fellow with a high, bulging brow, dead in the snow and frozen as stiff as a crowbar. The body was terribly emaciated from lack of food, and there were no papers or any other articles on his person to indicate his identity."

"His pockets did not contain a cent of money, but in them we found a description of a $10,000 summer cottage, a recipe for making ice-cream soda, a formula for curing gout, a newspaper clipping warning its readers against a dangerous counterfeit hundred-dollar bill, a description of an ancient Roman banquet, full directions for raising orchids, an advertisement of a Florida orange grove, a clipping describing a pleasure steamer yacht, another about the management of a thoroughbred racing stable, a small pocket map of Samoa, a price list of rare coins, instructions for detecting flaws in diamonds, a solemn warning against habitual over-eating, advice on wooing and winning a wealthy and beautiful young widow, and directions for the cure of a stroke. There was absolutely nothing on the body to show who or what he might have been, so we decided to call him an optimist, and let it go at that."

A Variety of Money.

"I understand that your husband returned from Klondyke last night," Mrs. Jurnigan, said the inquisitive villager. "Is he about the house now? I'd like to have a little talk with him regarding that region."

"I am sorry, Mr. Askington," replied the good woman, "but I am afraid you can't see him now. He is in bed upstairs, suffering from what the doctor calls nervous-er-er-prosperity. I believe it was."

"That's too bad," Mrs. Jurnigan. By the way, the report is in circulation that he brought all kinds of money home with him. Is that true?"

"Well, I don't know that he brought all kinds of money, Mr. Askington, but he certainly brought several kinds. He fetched back two copper cents, a Chinese coin that he had used for a lucky piece, a Confederate bill which he had taken along to swap to the Indians, a few pieces of Engman shell money, a bit of wampum, a lead nickel, and a poker chip. If he hasn't brought home all kinds of money, he has certainly returned with quite a variety."

The languorous quiet of Elyahim was gently broken now and then by the clink of glasses and the pop of opening ambrosia bottles.

"That, Charles I," explained one who had been three long enough to have learned the ropes. "He has an idea if he keeps up the gait he'll wake up with a head some morning."—Life.

Accident at the Canadian Gen. Elec. Works
There was a rather bad accident at the works of the Canadian General Electric Company yesterday at noon. Frank Hamilton, a young fellow, was helping a man named Taylor at a drill, when the end of the machine caught in his waistcoat and commenced twisting him round. The drill was shut off at once, but not before Hamilton had been badly scratched and bruised and his waistcoat torn. A doctor was sent for, and Hamilton was removed in a cab to his home. His injuries are not likely to prove very serious.

Trouble Preserved
The Kendal trout preserve has been purchased by five enthusiastic anglers of Toronto, who intend to build a club house and make Kendal a veritable angler's paradise. The gentlemen who are concerned in this enterprise are: Messrs. Henry Pellatt, Henry Mill Pellatt, N. McCrea, A. E. Amos, D. L. Van Vlack and Frederick Nichols, who is the general manager for the company. The amount of capital invested was $25,000, in shares of $500 each, all of which have been bought up. The Kendal trout preserves are located at Pontypool, not far from Peterborough, and flow through a most beautiful country of hill and dale and the general conditions are most favorable to the trout. The club house to be built will, according to the plans, will be quite a curiosity.

An Item for Lacrosse Players
By far the most troublesome feature of the national game as played in Ontario for years, has been the matter of disputed goals, says the Globe. Capable and unprejudiced umpires are not always to be had, particularly in small towns, and even capable men often have difficulty in giving correct decisions on close and fast shots. All this difficulty has been disposed of on old country fields by the adoption of the goal net, both in lacrosse and association football, and the only wonder is that it has not been long ago in use in Canada. The use of the net as one of the appurtenances of the game will be brought before the annual convention of the Canadian Lacrosse Association on Good Friday, a notice of adoption of the net having been given by Mr. Francis Nelson.

Our Young Citizens
Editor of the Times:
Sir,—There is a set of youths on our streets, principally at nights, who delight to use such blasphemous and obscene expressions as will shock the heart. Young lads of fourteen and sixteen, aye, and children of tender age, use vile language in describing the commonest every day occurrences, with the utmost coolness and nonchalance. Should not some forcible step be taken to partially stop at least this distressing habit? It would be imagined that a curse would surely come on this town some day, if so many, both old and young are constantly calling down damnation on everything and everybody alike. The prayer may be heard in a way we do not look for.

Yours obediently, Paterfamilias.

Another Fire in Town
Peterborough seems to be suffering from an epidemic of fires. Shortly before three o'clock yesterday morning the fiery element was responsible for the demolition of a considerable amount of damage to the stock of stationery and fancy goods in Mr. W. Salisbury's store on George street. The alarm was given by Constable McIntyre, who detected a smell of something burning when passing. The brigade promptly arrived and soon extinguished the fire which had its origin in the neighborhood of the store. The large stock was badly damaged by the smoke and water, and the account books were destroyed. The stock, which was insured in the Mercantile Fire Insurance Company through Mr. W. H. Hill for $2,000, is valued at $3,000.

Cheaper Fruit This Season

Lovers of choice tropical fruits will be pleased to learn that the importations to Canada this season will be very large; that the quality will be superior, and that prices are likely to be lower than they have in previous seasons.

The fruit steamer Matthews left Italy on the 21st inst., the steamer Fremont left on the 25th inst., for Montreal, with 65,000 boxes of lemons and 15,000 boxes of oranges. Another steamer is also loading for the same port. The first steamer will arrive in Montreal about April 25th, and the fruit will be sold about the first of May. This season an extra steamer has been chartered for this purpose and a much larger quantity of fruit will be brought to Canada than in previous seasons. This is due to the fact that the United States duty is about three times higher this season (than last).

Town Council Committee Meeting
Three committee meetings were held at the Clerk's office last evening. Councillor H. Denne presided over the gathering of the Finance committee, who passed several accounts.

The Street and Bridge committee meeting was presided over by Councillor Adam Dawson. The following tenders were accepted: For cedar seating and timber, Mr. W. B. Kelly, $9.50. For pine lumber, Mr. McDonald, $11.50. Councillor Best was chairman of the Sewerage committee meeting. Two accounts in connection with the North Monaghan litigation of 1895 were discussed. Mr. Christopher Robinson's bill of costs amounting to $75, and the Town Solicitor's account of $61 for the disbursements. Mr. E. B. Edwards explained the reason of the lateness in the presentation of the accounts. The committee passed both bills for payment.

Railway Notes

—The cheap fare for Easter for travel over the C.P.R. cannot take place this season as the rates are already lower than the lowest holiday rates ever adopted by any road.

—The C. P. R. will rebuild the railway bridge across the river at Galt. The new bridge will be built. The total estimate of the outlay, including the bridge and depot is between $60,000 and $70,000. A Hamilton firm has secured the contract for the iron work of the bridge.

—Mr. Bowen, contractor of the C. N. & P. Railway and his engineer, are expected in Campbellford next week, to study the route which the proposed railway from Cobourg will take running through the village. Mr. M.A. Hawley is here this week, looking after the right of way, and the necessary preliminary arrangements with quite a number of property owners.

Why Did He Stop?

A tall, cadaverous-looking individual, wearing a faded grey coat and dark trousers, aroused the curiosity of so many people on Hunter street yesterday afternoon, that one sidewalk was blocked for twenty minutes. The man had been walking quietly along, and when near Water street suddenly stopped and gazed abstractedly into the sky. He was chewing gum at a great rate and a she stood and vacantly looked into space people stopped and wondered. The man took no notice of them, but quietly chewed gum. The crowd of gazers increased in number, and the man had a full passed round the circle. The man stood in the one position for fully twenty minutes and then a policeman hurried in sight. Just as the policeman started to bustle him to one side, the man stepped forward and gazed into the sky and started to walk away. The crowd opened out and he passed through, meeting the policeman. The policeman hurried into the crowd to find him, but the man had walked quietly off up town, and the crowd rapidly melted away.

An Easter Number

The April Canadian Magazine is a Easter number with a handsome and appropriate cover. The leading article is "Rome During Holy Week" by Constantine Ruydier Boulton. It is illustrated from photographs and from special drawings by Fred H. Bridger, the well-known Canadian artist. There are also articles by Margie Merion, Katharine L. Johnston and A. Hooper. The two illustrated art articles in the issue are worthy of attention. "Mural Decoration," by G. A. Reid, R.C.A., is very instructive, and "The Academy Exhibition," by Norman Patterson, deals with the recent exhibit of pictures made by the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts. The illustrations of both of these are magnificent, and are a considerable art education in themselves. Canadians who feel that they would like to know more of art in general, and of Canadian art in particular should not fail to peruse these contributions. Current Events, Book Reviews and National Sport receive the usual attention. Making everything into a book of general interest and highly creditable. The next number will open the eleventh volume.

J. W. Taylor's Failure

Mr. J. W. Taylor, formerly manager of the Carbon Works in this town, and who left here to reside in Ottawa, has had a rather chequered career. It was Mr. Taylor who led to the failure of the old Carbon Company, when upwards of $50,000 of Peterborough capital was lost. He secured a similar position in Ottawa, and this company, too, was wrecked. The following is from the Ottawa Free Press, which shows that gentleman's more recent shady dealings:
The name of David Scullion, of the Hamilton Powder company, Arthur McConnell, the Ottawa Powder company, and Peter McVeigh, against J. W. Taylor on the ground that he was secreting and making away with his properties with intent to defraud his creditors, are being proceeded with to-day before Mr. Justice Laverne.

The evidence so far taken is intended to show that Taylor had procured credit extensively and was selling out his own property and has already sold about $4,000 worth, but failed to pay his men, or the powder companies. The debts amounted to $5,000, and the highest tender for his stock in trade which had been abandoned for the benefit of his creditors was $83.

Shall the Town Have a Peal of Bells?

To the Editor of the Times:
Sir,—With regard to your suggestion that Peterborough should go in for a peal of bells, would you allow me to call attention through your columns to the chapter on bells in "Music and Morals," by the Rev. H. R. Haweis, a work which is regarded as a high authority on musical matters? Mr. Haweis says that Belgium is the true land of bells, and the only place where their manufacture is understood. He thinks all English bells trashy. There is no question that the generality of chimes are very unmusical, and contain bells that are false, as regards the note aimed at. As far as I know, the most musical chime in the Dominion is that in Trinity Episcopal church, in St. John, N. B. It is superior to the chime in the Arlington street Unitarian church, Boston, the only chime of any consequence in Boston. If we entertain the idea of having a peal of bells, ought not Belgian manufacturers be consulted as well as English and American, before coming to a decision? A mediocre chime of bells is no credit or honor to a city; but, on the contrary is an evil, and should not be accepted even as a present. Faithfully yours, An Old Campanologist.

THE C. W. A. MEET

Support for Peterborough Will be Forthcoming from Toronto.

Ottawa is putting up a hard fight for the Wheelmen's Meet, and it behooves Peterborough to do her best or she may lose the plum. The following is from the Ottawa papers, and shows what is being done to secure the meet by the Ottawa people.
The fight that the O.A.A.C. Bicycle Club is putting up for the Provincial C.W.A. meet is astonishing Peterboro' as the latter town thought it could win in a walk. A great many who a month ago thought that Ottawa had no show, now admit that the Capital's chances seem very bright.

The club will send up a half a dozen good talkers to the annual meeting on Good Friday, to further set forth Ottawa's advantages.

It is now proposed to run an excursion to Toronto on Wednesday and Thursday of next week, and it is likely that quite a large number of wheelmen will go along to boom Ottawa.

The O.A.A.C. Glee Club will go along and help to make things lively and it is likely that Mr. A. D. Sturrock will sing at the Wanderer's smoker—Journal.

There are about 6,000 members of the C.W.A. in Ontario and it will take half that number of votes to bring the provincial meeting to Ottawa on Good Friday. Ottawa already has about 2,000 votes pledged, and has strong hopes of winning.

If half the wheelmen in the city belonged to a local bicycle club, and the list of names recorded for Ottawa, the capital could capture the meet in a walk. It would have been a great opportunity for the wheelmen of the city to help Ottawa get the meeting by the expenditure of a dollar. The effort should have been made to get at least half of the 3,000 wheelmen in the city enlisted in the C.W.A.—Citizen.

The O.A.A.C. Bicycle Club are working hard to secure the provincial meet for Ottawa. The latest decision of the club is to run an excursion to Toronto on the Wednesday before the C.W.A. meeting. A Glee Club will be taken up on an Ottawa will be boomed in song as well as speech. The Queen City of the west will also be decorated with bunting. It is further proposed that A. G. Sturrock shall sing for the club at the Wanderer's smoker.—Free Press.

At the annual meeting of the Toronto Bicycle Club, the items of business to be brought before the C.W.A. Good Friday meeting for the boards of directors. On all the matters the club's delegates were given power to cast their vote according to their judgment. In view of the circumstances arising, the feeling was, however, strongly in favor of Peterborough for the Provincial meet.

Stomach Trouble

Stomach trouble is the common name applied to a derangement of the system which is keenly felt but vaguely understood. It may mean inability to retain food or to digest it. It may mean nausea, pain after eating, fullness, inordinate craving for food, or entire lack of appetite. Whatever it means, there's trouble, and it's with the stomach. If you have stomach trouble, you will be interested in this letter from a man who had it and was cured by

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For nine years I suffered from stomach trouble. I tried the aid of the best doctors of Philadelphia and Pittsburg, and spent large sums of money, all in vain. One day while waiting a train in Bellaire, O., I picked up a paper with a notice of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I got one bottle to try it. It did me so much good that I purchased five more bottles. I took four of them and gained in flesh, my appetite improved, and now I can eat anything. My stomach is all right, thanks to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—CALVIN M. STEVENS, Uniontown, Pa.

Morning Times

PETERBOROUGH, APRIL 2, 1898

A SERIOUS QUESTION

While the result of its struggle with Japan showed the rottenness of the Chinese Government, the events of the past six months have given proofs of the inherent weakness and incapacity of the latter even more significant. The instant and complete collapse of the military defence of Kiao-Chau, when that place was threatened by a small force from the German warships, was almost ludicrous. The Chinese commander and his men did not wait to make any show of opposition to the invaders, but abandoned their fortifications as soon as the Germans landed. In the negotiations about a loan, and the territorial demands by Germany, Russia and France, the Chinese Government has given plain evidence of its recognition of the fact that it cannot successfully cope with any one of those Powers, much less with a combination of two or more of them. But for the attitude assumed by Great Britain, there can be little doubt that even before this China would have become merely a geographical term, and the Celestial Empire would either have been partitioned by arrangement between those three Powers, or they would now be engaged in a fierce struggle among themselves as to the particular share with each should have in the property of "the Sea of Heaven."

Even without any foreign aggression, it is doubtful whether the Chinese Empire can hold together much longer. Patriotism is something which has no existence in China, whether looked for among the mandarins or the masses of the people. The central Government at Peking has but a feeble control over the different Provincial administrations while the country is so vast in area and its population so ignorant of what is going on, that a large portion of the Empire might be taken possession of by a foreign Power, without it causing any commotion in other parts of it. The internal, economic and political weakness of the Chinese Empire, is a matter which will cause Great Britain more trouble in securing a permanent basis for the protection of her paramount commercial interests in that part of the world, than the sinister and selfish designs and schemes of aggrandizement of her great European rivals. It is difficult for the most skillful workman to repair a structure which is crumbling to pieces through internal decay and dry-rot, and the stronger the new material which is added to make the repairs, the more effective is it in disintegrating the old substance to which it is sought to attach it. The new cloth only makes the rent worse in the old garment, and this is the harassing problem, the solution of which is likely to demand the most strenuous efforts of the most sagacious for many years to come.

The Far Eastern question is but just opening. It is the most serious that the British Empire has had to meet during this century.

Mackenzie and Mann are thinking that the House of Commons made April fools of them in advance.

The harmony between Washington Congress and the President has become slightly Wagnerian.

Whatever means of evasion Spain utilizes, she cannot well creep out of that hole in the side of the Mine.

Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann are shut out of the Yukon contract but the museums and the lecture platforms are wide open for them.

Professor Perrine has caught another comet. If these things forebode a declaration of war their tails may suggest to the jingoes what comes after.

The solemn truth is that all the efforts of the Globe to excite this country's indignation have the well-defined tendency to excite this nation's mirth.

The best thing said about the differences between Spain and the United States fell from the eloquent lips of the once mighty John L. Sullivan: "Before Spain talks about fighting us, let her go out and get a reputation." This is the quintessence of Boston humor.

W. R. Beatty, the member-elect for Parry, still refuses to say he is a supporter of Mr. A. S. Hardy. Conservative journals will find a ready excuse for his refusal on the ground that by the rules of evidence no man is expected to admit anything which will incriminate himself.

"I wonder what's their object in sending over that torpedo flotilla? remark the Thoughtful Citizen. "Probably," suggested the Glibbing Idiot, "the Spanish Armada than we think." His death notice is published in another column.

To all intents and purposes, where is the difference in a Jingo getting on his high horse at an inopportune time, and a war poet mounting his Pegasus? That Senate vote in favor of Sifton's crazy deal was light enough to sit on one of the waxed ends of Sir Richard Cartwright's moustache.

Some of the big candy eggs have pretty landscapes built inside, but the average woman can't see the beauty in them she can in an Easter bonnet.

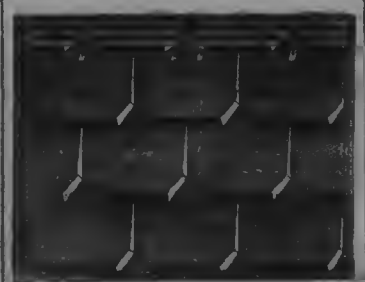

When one journal comes out for trouble with letters four inches long and another simply demand that the right be maintained in the usual typography, it shows how types of papers vary.

Quebec and Ontario appear to be closely related in one respect, judging by the following extract from a Quebec exchange: Disensions are already creeping into the Provincial Cabinet over the patronage question. We were always taught to expect nothing from the Conservatives but a desperate cynicism. Liberalism stood for principle, historical and contemporaneousness. It meant freedom and justice to every interest and creature. It was the incarnation of the principles of modern thought applied to the government of nations. And, truly, this is beautiful—in theory! Note how practice hails and hobbles! Was not Marchand heaven-sent? And have we not seen already that the question is not one of statesmanship, but outrage? The recalcitrant will, of course, be placated, but how shall we sustain an unflinching faith in a party which, claiming to have a mandate at once from the heavenly and human powers, is chiefly concerned for the nice distribution of the loaves and fishes?

The Bicycle Club Secretary Writes a Fercible Letter.

Ottawa's Criticism for Making Misrepresentation The Advance Ages the Town's Own Fair Play Wanted not sympathy

The following letter has appeared in the Toronto Mail and Empire:—
Sir,—May we trespass on your courtesy to print for Peterborough Bicycle Club comment on the statements, by or on behalf of the Ottawa A.A. Club in your issue of Thursday last. What purport to be extracts are given, taken from the circular issued by the Ottawas, who are in the fight for the provincial meet. At date of writing (26th) we have not even a copy of the circular, Peterborough not having been favored in the general distribution.

Here are two choice morsels; here are samples of Ottawa's style of argument; addressed to members of the C.W.A.:

"Do you want to go to a town where you have to be billeted out on some back street, away from the rest of the boys, with orders to be in at 9 o'clock or the door will be closed?" "Don't let sympathy side-track you to a small town without sufficient accommodation, and without a track in voting for wheeling and the C.W.A. you vote for Ottawa."

I believe Ottawa is making a mistake in starting in on a campaign with this sort of rot. Years ago, when Ottawa had only strength enough to keep it from stepping off the rocks into the river, it was known as "By-town." It hasn't outgrown By-town style of argument and By-town proclivities. Peterborough's application for the Ontario provincial meet was planted on Good Friday last about fifteen minutes after the legislation was passed granting provincial meets. Ottawa's Application was put in nearly ten months afterwards. By-town is a slow place.

Peterborough was good enough three years ago for Coulter, the American flyer, to make 1.57 1-2 un-paced on it. Ottawa's track hadn't at that time been pulled out of the woods. Peterborough's track was good enough two years ago for Davidson to bring a quad and his trainers and go for the Canadian records. The track is now better than it ever was, fit for any speed that riders can develop. It will be put in as perfect shape as money, labor and care can put it. Grand stand accommodation will be provided. Such details are a matter of enterprise, and grand stands generally pay their way.

Peterborough will offer visiting wheelmen a royal time. Our new electric lines to Chemong Park and to Lakefield will be finished and in running order. Both lines give access to beautiful spots. The trip around the lakes by steamer will be one of the most delightful that can be had. Down the river trips to the popular resorts will be arranged. These are agreeable things to the wheelman who does not care so much for racing as for a pleasant outing.

To wheelmen who can only take his one day-off-Peterborough offers all the advantages. It is central. Both lines of railway run through the town. The visitor can get here as early as 5 a.m., and get away as late as 11.30 p.m. Hundreds of young men can take a day at the meet, who before could not afford a three-day trip, while those who can take the time will find ample to repay them.

We can put all hands up. No need of raising a bugaboo about hotel accommodation. There will be ample for all who wish to stay over. Peterborough has plenty of assurance of support, but just now is not showing its hand. It is a sensible thing to be—sometimes—a trifle discreet. That is our line just now. We have plenty of assurance of hearty and generous support from club all along the line right up to the doors of Ottawa, that Peterborough will win. Our friends are supporting us because they say we deserve it. So far Ottawa hasn't had any such assurances on its behalf. Peterborough will not be drawn into a newspaper scrimmage to belittle Ottawa. Such a policy will not help us. Friends are not made by running down opponents. We want to let Ottawa alone, but to make ourselves strong. We can gain a great deal more by being generous with Ottawa than we can by pitting it to belittle Ottawa. It is a pity that Ottawa appears to think differently in and mistaking fact about that entity—and must take the consequences.

When our list of supporters among the clubs of the province is printed, Ottawa will realize where they stand, but all pieces of information we are keeping to ourselves just now. In the meantime we ask all wheelmen in the province to give us a lift on the ground—a pretty solid one, too—that we thoroughly well deserve it.

Yours, etc., F. H. DOBBS, Secretary Peterborough Bicycle Club, Peterborough, March 26th, 1898.

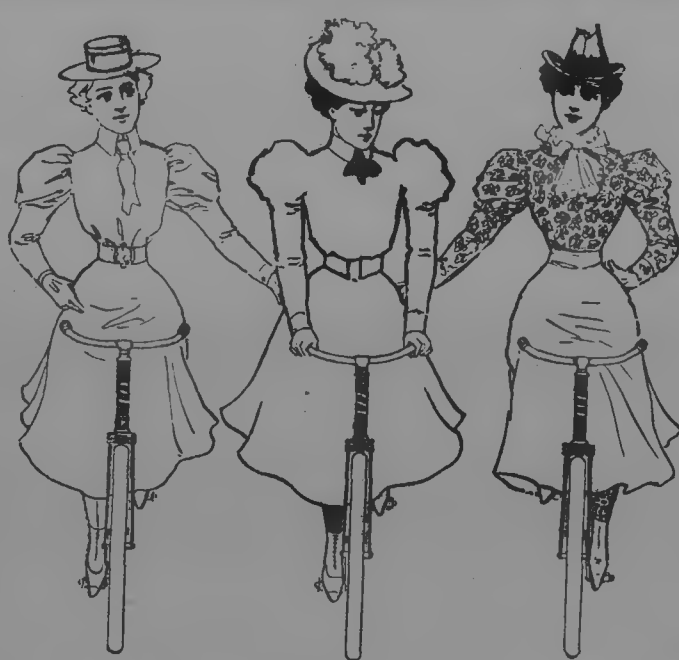

If you are not feeling well, why don't you take Hood's Sarsaparilla? It will purify and enrich your blood and be your wonderful good.

A DEAD MAN'S HONOR

BY CHARLES E. LEWIS

In the year 1863, which you will remember was fraught with more excitement than any other of the civil war, the firm of Hays, Williams & Girder, which was doing business in a town on the New England coast, registered in the newspapers in connection with a series of startling incidents. The firm dealt largely in fishermen's supplies and in fish and lumber, and in connection with its general store it had a private bank and the town postoffice. George Hays was postmaster, at least in name; John Williams ran the store and Joseph Girder conducted the bank. The "dead man" of the firm was Philip Lacy, who was a bachelor and had grown up with it from a boy. He was implicitly trusted, and any one of the partners would have suspended one of the others as soon as Lacy.

On the morning of July 5 in the year named one of the employees opened the store, to find Lacy sitting on a chair in the bank, with a gag in his mouth and his eyes and arms tied to the chair. He was dead at once, but it was hours before he could tell his story. He had been in the habit of remaining at the store until a late hour in the evening, looking over books and accounts. On the previous evening, just after 10 o'clock and as he was ready to leave, he had suddenly been attacked by two men, who must have been secreted in the store with that object in view. He was seized from behind and choked into a state of insensibility, and when he recovered he was sitting on the chair, bound and gagged, and the two men were at work on the vault of the bank.

The vault was merely a brick closet, defended by an iron door, which had none too safe a lock. There was no safe inside. All the money of the store, bank and post-office was placed in this vault at night, and on this occasion business about $10,000 in greenbacks there were government bonds amounting to $50,000.

The robbers took Lacy's vault key from his pocket and had the door open in half a minute. Each one of the firm had a key to the vault, but Lacy and Lacy were the only ones to make use of them. The robbers were not masked, and made no effort to conceal their identity. They went about their work in the coolest manner and when ready to depart did not leave a 10-cent shoplifter's cabinet. Money and bonds were packed in a sack, and before going they sat down to a lunch of crackers and cheese, and afterward smoked a cigar. They told Lacy that they belonged in New York and had had an eye on the "plant" for several months. They had done him little injury and he had done them a great deal. They removed the gag and gave him a drink of water and told him the time. When the men came to tell his story, it was not questioned in a single particular. He gave such a close description of the men that they were recognized by the Boston detectives as Sam Hays, the Boston detective, and Ford, two notorious and around crooks. Indeed it became known that the former had been hanging around the town for a month or more.

It was not until a detective was called into the case that the finger of suspicion pointed to Lacy. The employee who found him gagged and bound suddenly recollected that all the knots were loose and that it was little work to throw the ropes off. Lacy had seemed much exhausted, but this might have been a sham. Lacy had been heard to whisper for money to go into business for himself, had said he was tired of working for other folks, had attempted to borrow a considerable sum of money to buy a share in a fishing craft. Once the tide turned against him it was easy to make out a strong case. After a week's investigation the detective was satisfied that the trusted "head man" had robbed the concern and had hidden the booty, and there were so many points which favored the idea that Lacy was held for the crime. Three days after the robbery a man was picked up in the harbor which was been used and when she was righted two dead men were found in her. That they were not sailors was easy to see, and that the craft had been stolen from a town a few miles away was soon ascertained. The coroner's jury decided that the nameless strangers had taken the boat out for a sail and had been upset in a squall, and the incident hardly provoked comment. There was the key to the robbery, but no one grasped it. It came to the ears of the detective, but he was working to convict Lacy and paid no attention to outside matters.

Any man who has made a study of crime will tell you that a perfectly innocent man often mixes justice or

Paine's Celery Compound the Great Spring Cleanser and Life Giver

IT MAKES FRESH, PURE RED BLOOD FOR PALE AND SALLOW PEOPLE

April is now with us. The feathered songsters are here again warbling their sweetest notes in praise for a new season. Nature is throwing off her old garb. The trees are budding, the grass is showing new life, and soon the wild flowers will put on their dazzling dress of beauty and richness. All nature seems to be calling out to man, saying, "Be happy and rejoice; give thanks to Him who makes such glorious provision for the children of earth!"

Many a thankful prayer will ascend from truly grateful and healthy men and women for the beauties and bounties of the new season. On the other hand, a vast multitude of half-dead, broken down, weak, debilitated and suffering men and women will not have the capacity to appreciate the mercies so bountifully bestowed. Their thoughts are centered on their afflictions and sufferings, they are moody, despondent, morose, and some are despondent and in despair.

It is to this suffering class that we would speak words of hope and comfort. Warning would be unnecessary if you fully realized the fact that Paine's Celery Compound cures the disease that is now making such progress and havoc in your body.

It matters not whether the trouble be rheumatism, neuralgia, kidney disease, liver complaint, nervous prostration, agonizing dyspepsia or blood disease, Paine's Celery Compound is able to make you whole and well.

Paine's Celery Compound, unlike other medicines, is a true and rapid banisher of disease; it makes the blood pure, so that life and energy flow quickly to every muscle, nerve and tissue. Nature's medicine promptly restores strength, vigor, appetite and digestion; it gives sweet sleep and repose to the worried and restless.

Will those honest and strong assurances induce you to give earth's best medicine a fair trial in this your time of danger? The experience of physicians and their kindly words in favor of Paine's Celery Compound should be a guarantee of success to you. The marvellous results given to weak, sickly and broken down clergymen, judges, members of parliament, and to worthy and honorable citizens of every city in the Dominion, speak volumes in favor of Paine's Celery Compound.

One bottle experimented with at this season is always enough to make the most critical and skeptical continue with the medicine, until they are cured.

It has been truly said by an eminent Canadian press correspondent that "No physician is ever needed in houses where Paine's Celery Compound is used."

What was done about it? Well, words are cheap, and, therefore, plenty of men expressed their sorrow for what had occurred. Lacy's body had been buried at the expense of the town. His friends of other days raised a purse and bought a lot in town cemetery, and the firm which he had not robbed spent $50 for a tombstone to stand at the head of the grave. Perhaps nothing more was to be looked for. The singular manner in which the dead man cleared his honor was long a matter of talk, and for a few days or weeks young Thornton was something of a hero. The detective who had had his theories spoiled began dropping a word here and there, with the result that the clerk finally left town under a cloud, and to-day there are plenty of people in the town who believe and declare that he and Lacy put up the robbery and were to go halves on the plunder. I have looked upon the grave and heard the story of the wronged man a dozen times, and I believe all things occurred as Lacy and Thornton related them.

Morning Times

PETERBOROUGH, APRIL 2, 1898

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS.

Bought at 55c. on the 5
Kidd, the booter, is still selling boots and shoes that cost 55c. on the 5 away below cost. 405 George Street.

A Big Shipment
Mr. H. P. Kennedy shipped a large consignment of stockers yesterday to the American market, consisting of over 500 head. The majority of the stock are yearlings and two-year-old steers and will be sent to the Iowa and Nebraska ranches.

A Small Gold Mine
Kidd's boot and shoe store — 405 George St. — is a gold mine for those who require good footwear cheap.

Don't Want Peterborough
The Port Hope Guide says: "An effort will be made to have a league formed, consisting of Cobourg, Whitby, Oshawa, Bowmanville and Port Hope, which is similar to the Midland Hockey League." It is evident that Peterborough plays too swift a game for our friends of Port Hope and their "league."

How to Cure All Skin Diseases
Simply apply "Swayne's Ointment." No internal medicine required. Cures tetter, eczema, itch, all eruptions on the face, hands, nose, etc., leaving the skin clear, white and healthy. Its great healing and curative powers are possessed by no other remedy. Ask your druggist for Swayne's Ointment. Lyman, Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents. Avoid substitutes.

An Invention in Lacrosse
It is likely that all lacrosse matches this year will be played with netted goals. The net will extend from the top of the goal pole to the ground about seven feet back, with sides enclosed, forming a cage with an open front. The object of the game is to do away with disputed goals, the subject of so much unpleasantness on lacrosse fields. With this contrivance the umpire can make no mistake.

A Popular Company
Mr. F. Lee, the hustling local representative of the York County Loan and Savings Company, reports business unusually good of late. This popular company has assets of $109,109.92, of which $30,900 is mortgages on real estate. The York County was instituted with these objects in view: 1st, to help all who became members to secure their own homes free from encumbrances; 2nd, to promote thrift and saving, especially among the young; 3rd, to afford a safe and profitable investment of capital.

Fresh Strawberries, 25 cents a box. J. B. Oke, 418 George St.

North Star Sold
Capt. Martin, of the North Star, has disposed of his steamer and burge to Mr. George McWilliams, who will run it this season as usual on the Rice Lake waters. It is understood the price was in the neighborhood of $3,000. The many patrons of the Star will regret Capt. Martin's retirement from the command of this little vessel.

The Fire Brigade Foiled
Yesterday was All Fools' Day. At a quarter to eight o'clock last night an alarm was raised by the ringing of the fire bell, and the brigade received a call to Mr. Davey Hartley's house on Dublin street. There was a prompt response, and the brigade, a large number of pedestrians and quite a few cyclists rushed off, only to find that a chimney was on fire. Probably the only persons who did not feel disappointed were the reporters.

Fire Sale at Watson's
The recent fire at E. F. Mason & Co's has had the effect of slightly enlarging by breaking the immense stock of groceries and provisions carried by this firm, and in order to facilitate renovation and make room for new goods a clearing sale has been inaugurated and is now in full swing. Everything must go, and at almost your own price. Don't procrastinate! Call to-day!

A Wonderful Month
The most remarkable month of March on record or in the memory of the oldest inhabitants has closed—remarkable for its mildness and entire freedom from snow, presenting in aspect resembling April, barring the occasional snow flurries and raw winds peculiar to that month. Springtime is upon us in advance by two or three weeks, forcing vegetation forward to a degree dangerous in case of hard frosts in early April.

Local Bicycle Dealers Say That
The demand for wheels this season has been unprecedented so early in the year, and prospects are that a very large number will be sold during the next few weeks. The fine weather of the last few days brought out a great many prospective purchasers, who visited the various emporiums and made inspections with great interest. Those who don't like this summer won't be in it, so to speak.

Piles: Piles: Itching Piles
Symptoms—Moisture, intense itching and stinging; most at night; or by scratching. If allowed to continue, tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate and become very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Lyman, Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents.

Our Young Citizens
Editor of the Times:
Sir,—I was pleased to see the letter of "Paterfamilias" bearing on this subject. I think a suggestion to the chairman of the police committee, or otherwise the mayor, would be much in order to do away with the nuisance, viz., to give imperative orders to the night policeman to bring these incorrigible youths before the police magistrate, who, I am confident, will protect the good name of the town. Please publish and oblige, yours truly,
A LADY MORALIST.

Don't and Favors Peterboro
At a large and enthusiastic meeting of the Branford Bicycle Club held in the Belmont Hotel, various matters of interest were discussed. The club unanimously decided to support Peterborough for the meet, and to use every legitimate influence to help that city to get it. The Branford this year has a larger number of votes than any other single club in the association. Mr. Walker will cast the club's ballot, and it was left to him to exercise his own judgment as to whom he should support for the various contested offices.

Bicycle Notes
Beauty may be only skin deep, but the plump girl gets the most tandem rides.
Cyclists are more in evidence every day. Driving and pedestrianism will soon be unfashionable.

A Prominent Cyclist said yesterday:
"Ottawa hasn't a ghost of a show for the C. W. A. meet; it's Peterboro' in a walk. There is nothing encouraging in this, but Ottawa is still pushing ahead with a hope that they may win."—Toronto Telegram.

Difficult to Beat
Western editorial slang can no longer claim supremacy. Newfoundlanders can equal if not exceed Western ink alingers. During the election just closed in that colony, the Telegram contained a letter in which the editor of that journal was characterized as a "palish brute" and a "nervous paralytic," to which the editor replied that the writer of the letter is always "soaked with rum," that whenever a crisis arises he is "drunk," that he washed himself just twice a year, that he is always placed in the ship's hold when travelling because he is so dirty, that the hotel's decline to admit him for the same reason and that his presence in the city is a standing proof that the sanitary conditions are not properly attended to." It must be borne in mind that the man thus described was a candidate for parliamentary honors. Who can excel this in vituperation?

Mailway Notes
The rate war among the railways is evidently no nearer a settlement than it was two hours after it was started. The representatives of the railways interested have met twelve times since it started with a view to adjusting matters, and each time have failed to agree. Once again they met, and an adjournment has been made until April 15th at New York.

The way in which the C.P.R. and G.T.R. have been cutting rates of late has caused the general public to hope that the cheaper rates have been so profitable to the railway companies and increased the number of persons taking advantage of cheap transportation to such an extent, that the high fares of former days will never be resumed. Competition has brought down the price of most things, and it is to be hoped now that railways have reduced rates to a reasonable figure they will be kept there.

A "Pointer" for Peterborough
Mayor Sheppard has had a communication from the town to make a definite proposal, as to the inducements it will give toward shoving the concern locate here. He has replied that he will bring the matter before the council on Monday evening next, and will communicate whatever action it may take later. In view of the embryo state of the power scheme the council is a wee bit handicapped in the matter of offering inducements. With that scheme completed they would have it at their hand to give cheaply concessions which should bring this factory with its 200 employees to our midst.—Orillia News-Letter.

Worth Seeing
Every rider of a bicycle is interested in the latest and most improved methods in use in the leading factories of the world. Writer took advantage of the opportunity to run through the great works of Massey-Harris Company at Toronto the other day and was simply astounded at the sight of the wonderful and costly pieces of machinery at work in the manufacture of the wheels. From the smith-shop, where the immense drop hammers pounding out the steel forgings almost deafened one to the assembly and inspection department, everything was a revelation. My escort told me that the demand for the popular Massey-Harris is greater than ever, and it is doubtful, even with the perfect system and capabilities existing, whether all the orders will be filled.

A Suspicious In-law Company
There are grave fears among the Canadian policy holders of the New York Mutual Reserve Association that efforts are being made to "freeze out" the old members by means of excessive assessments. Many persons in Peterborough and vicinity who took out policies in this company years ago were satisfied with the investment, but are now beginning to feel the taxation burlesome, and if the assessments continue to increase in the same ratio as they have in the past few years, the payments would in time more than double the amount of the policy. The safest and most profitable plan under these circumstances will be to drop out as did many policy holders in the absorbed Canadian Mutual Aid Association, which like a flower sprang up, but soon withered away.

What the Churches are Doing
Rev. D. O. Crossley, the pastor, will preach at both services at Charlotte Street church to-morrow. Morning subject, "Light in the darkness." The evening service will be the regular monthly song sermon.
At St. John's Church to-morrow the services are as follows: Holy Communion, 8.30 a.m.; morning prayer and sermon, 11 a.m.; Sunday school, 1 p.m.; Bible class, 3 p.m.; Men's meeting, 4.30 p.m.; evening prayer and sermon, 7 p.m.
At All Saints' Church, Rev. Mr. Armitage will preach morning and evening next Sunday. His morning subject will be "Christ the King," and in the evening the subject of his discourse will be "What the Church has and yet has not—worship."
Rev. Mr. Warren, of Lakofield, preaches at St. John's Church next Wednesday evening and at All Saints' on Thursday.

ALL FOOLS' DAY
Some Pranks Which Were Played in Town Yesterday

A telephone message reached a well-known veterinary surgeon yesterday morning requesting him to bring one of his best turn-outs to the Grand Central Hotel. When he arrived, he found he had been hoaxed.

A popular "restaurant" was seen wending his way down Charlotte street with a quart of oysters. On delivery, he was informed that the order was a bogus one.

A local grocer's employee is said to have been delivering potatoes all the morning to a well-known restaurant. Poor Johnnie will have lots of work to-day.

Even members of the Times staff got gay. In the wee small hours of the morning the Central office, the telephone company was run up "just for a romance." Our devil, who is usually pretty cute, was victimized. He was sent up into the bindery for an "italic wrench," and he returned to the press room with a large iron bar. However, he got even before the day was through. He's a clever person who can take a rise out of our "Child of Darkness."

Spring Medicine

Experience teaches the importance of special care of the health.

And fixed among the important principles of hygiene and health is the acknowledged necessity of a good Spring Medicine.

Just as firmly established by the experiences of millions of people, is the positive fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla is "far and away" the best blood purifier and spring medicine ever produced.

The necessity is found in the impure condition of the blood at this season, owing to the close confinement and breathing vitiated air in office, store, shop, house, schoolroom or factory; excessive eating and drinking too rich and hearty food; late hours and social indulgences. With the blood thus thick and impure, the machinery of life grinds hard.

Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, builds up and strengthens the nerves and tones the stomach. It oils up the machinery of the whole body; the liver takes up its work anew, the kidneys resume activity, the ache goes out of the back, the bowels are regulated, the appetite restored, the food is relished and assimilated.

Don't wait till you are thoroughly sick before you begin to take a Spring Medicine.

Lock the door before the horse is stolen.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla now as a preventive and it will pay you a thousand fold in health and strength through the coming summer.

"We always take several bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla in our family every spring as a tonic and blood purifier and we find that it overcomes that tired feeling gives new life, and keeps us well all summer." WM. RINGEL, 813 5th Ave., Peoria, Illinois.

Excellent Spring Medicine.

"For a number of years I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla in our family every spring, not for any particular ailment, but on general principle, that the system needs a tonic at this time, and I have always found Hood's Sarsaparilla a most excellent spring medicine." HAZEN HAMMER, Engineer, Pottstown, Pennsylvania.

That Tired Feeling.

"I was troubled with that tired feeling all the spring. I purchased three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and when I had taken about half of it I was feeling well again. I believe Hood's Sarsaparilla to be an excellent blood purifier and tonic." MISS ORA E. MORGAN, Bussey, Illinois.

Builds up the Health.

"We take Hood's Sarsaparilla as a tonic in the spring. Two of our children had tonsillitis and their blood was in a bad condition. Hood's Sarsaparilla built them up, and we have taken it again this spring with good benefit." MRS. P. H. CANOON, Pleasant Lake, Mass.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to buy anything else instead. There is no substitute for Hood's.

Sold by all druggists. $1, six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass. The One True Blood Purifier.

PETERBOROUGH, APRIL 4 1898

THE NEW MARKET BY-LAW

The necessity for our Town Council passing some such by-law as has recently come into operation was exemplified on Saturday, when the market scales disclosed the fact that many bags of potatoes purporting to weigh 90 lbs. fell considerably short of that weight. It must not be assumed, however, that the public have been systematically robbed in the past. All purchasers do not expect to receive 90 lbs. weight of potatoes when they bargain with the dealer. Many of them buy by the sack, and are not concerned as to the number of pounds they receive. On the other hand, numerous parties have been under the impression that in buying a sack they receive a bushel and a third—100 lbs.; and it is to ensure the protection of these people that the new by-law has been adopted. But, like almost all legislation, the recent enactment does not work altogether smoothly.

The farmers undoubtedly have a grievance over their being required to weigh potatoes in cases where the purchaser does not ask for or require the weight of his or her purchase to be ascertained. Then, too, the delay occasioned by the waiting for their turn at the weigh-bridge is, to say the least of it, very tedious. However, there is a remedy for this latter grievance, and until that remedy is provided our farming friends have a right to kick. More scales must be available—say, one at each of the two corners of Water street on the east side of the square. These would facilitate the weighing of the bags, which work, at the best, is not a particularly enjoyable business. The threat to raise the usual market price of potatoes because a few of three cents is charged for the weighing of each bag must not be taken seriously. We believe that with improved facilities for weighing, and with the dispensing of an appeal to the scales when the purchaser does not ask for weight, there will be very little trouble in the future.

REFLECTIONS

"The wisdom which is from above," said a preacher, "is first true and then merciful. The light from above is never false. Vain indeed would be the powerful pinions of the eagle if he were never to use them to soar above the earth. Every man's life is a plan of the Almighty God which he is to take up and follow out to its uttermost possibilities. One thing is certain, that the main business of every human soul is to find its right place on this earth. Our knowledge is not complete without some acquaintance with the many false theories of our life."

There are many modes of life governed by false theories. One of these is the epicurean mode of life. This is a pleasure loving life. We apply this name to a life of sensual indulgence. Those who follow it believe that pleasure is a virtue, but they do not hold with Epicurus that virtue is a pleasure. In making pleasure the rule of life every man must be allowed to choose for himself. Some will find pleasure in virtue. Some will find pleasure in vice.

Another false theory of life, though opposite to epicureanism is still mean and low. One makes the body everything, the other makes the body nothing. This is an entirely false view of life. The God who made us does not require it. He does in a measure require self-sacrifice and suffering, but not to this degree. The grand object in view is that man is to fulfill the end and aim of his being, but not by subservience of his faculties.

Another and still more fantastic theory is Pantheism. It consists in the belief that there is no personal God, and in maintaining on the contrary that the world is governed by a subtle essence. It destroys all individual responsibility in man.

We must throw aside all these theories and return to the solemn truth of Holy Writ. That book assures us that every man's life is a terrible responsibility, and that character is the sustaining glory of individual greatness. To the earth belongs his corruptible body, but another and higher world claims his immortal soul. While the church performs labors on earth the roaring gulf of human passions and hatred will be calmed by the voice.

Holy week.

The spring lamb has sprung back.

Our new market by-law is a weighty matter.

The milliners made hats while the sun was shining.

Two swallows to not make a summer; neither is a mild March an infallible sign of spring.

The question now agitating the feminine mind is—what are the probs. for Easter Sunday?

Mann and Mackenzie are not the only men in the British Empire capable of building railways for governments. There are others.

The Globe, didn't think the Senate could play ball. Now that the ball is over the fence, it is kicking at the umpire's decision.

Thirty-four protests is the record so far from the recent Ontario general election. For the lawyers, elections are always victories.

The Times would like to see Mr. Stratton in the Cabinet. He is a "born" politician, and would make an able and successful minister.

To reduce the stoutness incident to his fifty and odd years the Prince of Wales has taken to the bike. His Royal Highness is getting on.

"A fatal vote" some of the Liberal press calls it, when speaking of the vote in the Senate. So it was. It killed Yukon Bill, the government's prodigal son.

A Chinaman in a court of justice pleaded guilty the other day to committing a murder, and as soon as the court could get its breath the man was remanded for examination for insanity.

With Honest Tom Blizard Minister of Agriculture, J. R. Stratton in the Cabinet and Richard Hall in the Upper Chamber at Ottawa, Peterborough could worry along for another year or two.

Laureate Austin's poetic plea for hands all round may deepen the kindly international feeling for which Ambassador Bayard paved the way, but it will take more than rhythmic feet to kick holes in the hard Dingley wall large enough to admit Canadian reciprocity.

There is no truth in the rumor that instructions have been received to place the steamers on Rice Lake and Stoney Lake waters on a war footing. Although it is a fact that the vessels are mobilizing.

The Ottawa Journal says that Ottawa given the C.W.A. meet, will hang up the biggest prize list that has ever been given at a bicycle meet in Canada. The Times is of opinion that the list will be "hung up"—to dry.

You remember Sir John A. Macdonald's remark that the Second Chamber was required to cool off the hasty legislation of the Lower House. In the hot fire of criticism, the Yukon deal was cooled most effectively.—Galt Reporter.

"The largest number of sticks," begins the Toronto Globe in an article eulogizing Hon. Mr. Sifton's ability and replying to attacks on him, "are usually found under the best apple tree." What a superb apple tree the Dominion Senate must be judged by the Globe's sticks.

A Birmingham, Eng., paper says that there is no end to the ingenuity of insurance companies. One company has recently issued a prospectus of special interest to fathers and mothers. It contains a clause insuring an infirmity in the case of the blessing, or otherwise, of twins appearing in their households. For a small weekly, quarterly, or yearly payment, a sum varying from £10 to £20 becomes due on every occasion that the family is increased in a double ratio. The acturaries do not seem to have been able to compute the scale of payment on which the companies would be willing to take the risks against triplets.

PETERBORO'S GOLD-SEEKERS

What a Toronto Newspaper has to Say About Them

In a chatty article entitled "On a settlers' train" the Saturday Globe has the following reference to Messrs. Munro and Clarke's Klondike party: But in the meantime the train had steamed up the grades to Myrtle, and one engine had been left behind. At Peterborough the station platform was crowded, and twenty-five passengers were lifted, among them a party of townsmen booked for Dyea, en route for the Klondike. People naturally associate a trip to the Klondike with fur coats, leather jackets, rough but warm clothing, hobnailed boots and sleeping bags. The Globe was therefore not a little surprised to be introduced to a party of fashionably dressed young men, with kid gloves, light overcoats, crossed trousers and buttonholes. But let it not be supposed that from this the party is going out unprepared. Possibly they are the best organized and best found party that has yet left Canada for the Klondike. It merely means that their effects have preceded them to the coast. The party includes Chas. Gladman, manager; S. M. Munro, P. M. Clarke and E. Neil, of Peterborough; F. S. Hartstone, Warkworth; W. T. P. and E. J. Dyers, of Monro's Bay, formerly of Peterborough; Dr. W. Douglas, Chatham, and Mr. G. (said to stand for gold) Hunter, of Victoria, B.C. The party have six tons of supplies and seven tons of expectation. They are equipped with a steam drill for boring into the frozen earth, canvas for transportation and food enough to last a year and a half. They will draw some out of 150 pounds of tobacco, although they take this much of the weight three of the party do not use it. It cost each member $1,200 to fit out, and some of the party sold out their business to go. Mr. Munro is the only married man in the party. They have even organized a mutual benefit fund, by means of which any taken sick may be inviolated home with all the care that money can procure. Mr. John Strickland, son of R. C. Strickland, of Lakefield, and brother of Inspector Strickland, of the Mount Police stationed in the Klondike, was with the party en route for the gold field. They expect to reach their destination in June. In Mr. Gladman they have a leader who knows every inch of the Yukon country. He was with the Ogilvie party and is now at the coast arranging for the passage of the party from Vancouver on the steamer Islander on April 13.

MATRIMONIAL EXPERIENCES

I really did not want a wife. How, I, a sober man of forty, came to advertise for one, about a year ago, I have never been able to determine. Perhaps it was fate that impelled me; more probably it was curiosity and a love of fun.

At any rate my readers might have seen in the columns of a paper about a year ago, the following advertisement:

MATRIMONY.—A professional man, aged twenty-eight, tall and dark, with private income apart from his profession, wishes to meet a young lady with a view to matrimonial alliance. The lady must be bright and intelligent, musical, and accustomed to move in good society. Pecuniary gain less a consideration than a happy union. Address, E.S.A., Box 192.

I am ashamed to say that I had no misgivings, nothing but a feeling of amusement and pride, when I saw my composition in the glory of print. As I have confessed, my age is not twenty-eight, but forty, and, as I now confess, my private income is derived from a few gold shares which pay small and intermittent dividends, barely enough to keep me in gloves. But "all is fair in love and in war," I argued mentally and this trifling deviation from truth or, as we lawyers call it, this "suggestion of fact," while it would attract no notice to the flame, would not for a moment stay the course of true love.

"True love"—the idea took my fancy, and I laughed like a schoolboy over my little joke, and congratulated myself that I had had the good sense to reverse my initials.

Now, although my venture was conceived in the spirit of levity, it had a very serious issue, and I wished it to be understood that I am relating in sober truth an actual experience—with only such changes of initial and locale as will conceal the identities of the unhappy ladies who jumped at my bait. I awaited to answers to my advertisement with excitement. They came thick and fast. The first mail on the following morning brought me seven, and by the end of the day I had reached the unlucky number of thirteen. Four came next day, and afterwards they dropped in singly until, a week after my advertisement appeared, the record was closed at twenty-three.

I will say nothing of my feelings on reading these precious letters, each one offering me, a stranger, beauty or youth or accomplishments, or all three. My object is to select from them a few, which may be regarded as a type of all, for the benefit and amusement of my readers. I have, I am sorry to say, no compunction in doing this. The writers cannot be traced, and if any should see the resurrection of a forgotten episode in their lives, some useful lesson may be learnt.

My first letter, which was written in a somewhat masculine hand was as follows:

Dear Sir: I hope you will not think me wanting in modesty in answering your advertisement. I am naturally very diffident and retiring, but, when the happiness of two lives are (sic) at stake, it is no time to flatter modesty. It almost seems that Nature has designed us for each other. I am exactly your own age; am reputed to be elegant and accomplished. I am passionately fond of music, and am at home in any society. I may say that I have been married—for a few brief happy years. This, I hope, will not be a disqualification. I know the sweets and bitterness of married life, and my experience of domestic management would be very helpful. I shall be happy to arrange a meeting, and am, very truly yours, Bertha M.

A straightforward letter enough. The unconscious admission that our ages were the same amused me. However, I was not quite prepared to become a second string to any lady's bow, and I fear that nature's designs have been frustrated in this case. The next letter was written in a large, unformed hand, with flourishes, intended, no doubt, to impress me. I reproduce it as follows:

Mr. S.S.A.: I answer to your advertisement. I am on the lookout for a gentlemanly party such as you seem to be. I am tall and stylish, and very fond of concerts and theaters. My family is down in the world, and I am earning my living in domestic services; but when father was alive he moved in the best circles in the City. If you walk in Central Park to-morrow afternoon at three you will see a young lady near the Obelisk with a white parasol and pink roses in her hat. It will be me.

Yours respectfully, S.N.

It is needless to say that I never met the young lady with the white parasol in her hat.

My next letter was of a very different type. It was deftly performed, and written in a neat hand. It came from New Bedford.

Dear Sir: I hope I am not overstepping modesty reserve in writing to you. I am a fearful being thought indicate that I have taken my dear sister into my confidence, and she quite approves of my writing. I have not for some years thought of love or marriage. I had intended to devote myself to my dear sister, who lives with me, but she is to be married soon to a wealthy stockbroker, and will require my devotion no longer. I have been struck by the gentlemanly tone of your advertisement, and my heart goes out to you. I am accounted a good musician; indeed, I always take the music lessons in the school which Sophie and I jointly conduct; and I am familiar with the habits of good society. My dear father was a major in the army. You do not specify my age. I am no longer quite a young lady, I am thirty-nine, but this slight difference in age will not prevent our union being an ideal one. My sister joins me in inviting you to drink tea with us to-morrow afternoon or, indeed, any afternoon this week.

Very sincerely yours, Amy B.

There seemed to me to be something pathetic in this letter. I felt sorry for the writer, but when a lady confesses to thirty-nine—well, the stock broker and I are never likely to be related.

Letter No. 4 was written in a large, sprawling hand, well sprinkled with blots.

Dear Sir: I have just seen your advertisement in the—, and the thought flashed into my head what jolly fun it would be to marry. Although I am nearly eighteen, I am still at boarding school, and I simply hate it. Miss De Foe, the head mistress, is an old cat, and half starves us. I am not going to stand it any longer. Dad has married again, and my stepmother is so spiteful that I would rather run away than live with her. It would be so jolly to marry and get away from it all. Please don't think me forward. I don't mean to be; only I am sick of things. You seem to me to be dreadfully old. I hope you aren't very serious. They all say I am very pretty; but you can judge for yourself if you will meet me, etc., etc.

I am ashamed to say that I never met Miss T., and for aught I know she may at this moment be making things lively for her stepmother. I mailed as pictured her horror at finding that I am forty and bald.

My next letter was from a gushing young thing. It speaks for itself.

Dear Mr. S.S.A.: You won't think me inellegant for answering your advertisement, will you? I adore tall, dark men (are you handsome, too, I wonder), and should like to be the wife of a professional man. Pa is only in trade, but in a very large way, and I was educated at boarding school where I learned deportment, etc. I am a good French scholar, but I am going to say, I am not musical, although my brothers and sisters are. I may mention that my mother's brother is a Major.

But what do all these things matter, when two hearts are only love each other, as I am sure we shall? I am tall and blond (sic), and am considered very pretty, though of course, I cannot judge. Please address P.R. to Station O, Brooklyn, as I don't want Pa and all of them to know until it is all settled. Won't it be a surprise for them!

Yours lovingly, Priscilla R.

"Pa and all of them," are still waiting the shock of discovery; "but what do these things matter," so long as I am assured that terrible family concert, with probably the mayor of—joining in?

I should like to give the remaining letters, but what editor would tolerate such an abuse of his columns? One more I must give. Of the rest I may simply say that the writers included a typewriter, a lady's maid, four more widows, one of whom confessed to three former husbands, three governesses, and a lady who informed me on pink notepaper that she was the niece of a millionaire, but that, conditional on a proper settlement, (oh! my poor gold shares), she was willing to bestow her hand on me, without having seen me, remember!

I must hasten to the last of my selected letters, which strangely enough was the very last I received.

Dear Sir: I am not ashamed to answer your advertisement, for I think from its tone you are an honorable man, and will not misunderstand my motive. I fear I have very little to offer you that will be acceptable, unless indeed, you will prefer a loyal wife to one with a rich dowry.

I am, I think, fairly pretty and fairly well educated, but I have few, if any, graces and accomplishments. I have no money, but my mother taught me the arts by which a home may be made comfortable, and I have been nursed in thrift. I would try to make you very happy, and, in any event, I hope you will find a wife worthy of you, and that you will be very happy with her.

Faithfully yours, Vera M.

The tone of this letter pleased me very much. There was in it none of the tawdry sentiment or pretence which marked so many of the other letters, and I wondered vaguely how such a girl could answer a matrimonial advertisement.

The more I thought of this anomaly, the more my curiosity was stimulated. I arranged a meeting with her, still I am ashamed to say, out of idle curiosity, and was not surprised to find that she was a singularly modest attractive girl, full of—

"Oh, please stop, Alfred!" It is my wife who thus rudely interrupts me. She has been peeping over my shoulder. "You will never finish if you begin a catalogue of my virtues. Simply

TWO CASES FOR SETTLEMENT

One of Them is an Action Against the Street Railway Company

At the County Court sessions, which will be opened by Judge Weller to-morrow, the following civil cases are down for settlement.

T. Hurley & Co. vs. W. H. Moore.—In this case the plaintiff seeks to recover from the defendant the sum of $200, alleging in the statement of claim that the defendant offered him such sum of $200 if plaintiff would procure a purchaser for the west half of lot No. 7, in the 13th concession of North Monaghan, for the sum of $6,500. The plaintiff alleges that he procured Wm. Rutherford to offer the defendant the sum of $6,500 for the lot, but that the defendant then refused to sell, and demanded a much larger sum.

The plaintiff claims that he performed his share of the contract in procuring the purchaser at the sum agreed upon, and also that he be awarded the sum of $200.

In the statement of defence the defendant denies having made any such agreement with the plaintiff, and as a counter claim states that the defendant induced Philip Minicola to purchase from the Toronto Real Estate Investment Co., lot (No. 8, on the south side of 12th street) for the price of $1,000. That Minicola paid over to the defendant $874.50 on account of the purchase of said lands on the understanding that the money received was paid over before the plaintiff left and took up his residence in Chicago. That Minicola was then induced to make good the balance amounting to $275.72. That on this account the plaintiff, on returning from Chicago paid over to Minicola the sum of $35. The balance still due by the plaintiff has been assigned by the former to the defendant, which sum the defendant claims to be entitled to recover.

In the reply and statement of defence of the plaintiff to the defendant's statement of defence and counter-claim, it is set forth that the plaintiff expended the balance of money claimed on account of taxes, insurance and other costs, and that the sum of $35.80, and this amount the plaintiff is willing to allow the defendant and to reduce the amount of the claim in respect of which this action is brought to that extent.

J. B. O'Connell for plaintiff; Dennington, Perk & Stevenson for defendant.

James White vs. Peterborough and Ashburnham Street Railway Company.—The plaintiff in this case is the proprietor of the National Hotel, and he brings suit for the sum of $195, being the amount of costs incurred through a live guard wire breaking down at the corner of King and George streets and coming in contact with the plaintiff's horses, killing one and badly injuring the other.

The statement of defence alleges that it was through careless driving that the injury was caused.

D. O'Connell for plaintiff; A. P. Poussette, Q. C., for defendant.

The following are a few from scores of testimonials the Sergt-Major has from people who have used this preparation:

I have used Kenny's Hair Restorer for dandruff and falling out of my hair. It has removed the dandruff, and a few applications prevented my hair falling out. Three bottles of Kenny's Hair Restorer has restored the hair on my head to the original state. I can in justice to the manufacturer recommend Kenny's Hair Restorer from my own experience as the best remedy I have ever heard of for the prevention and cure of baldness, and I am sure it will accomplish all that it is claimed for if properly applied as directed.

READ WHAT PHYSICIANS SAY OF POND'S EXTRACT

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 29, 1894.
I have used "Pond's Extract" for many years and always assist upon my patients getting "Pond's," not the ordinary Extract, which is often a very poor article. W. K. BROWN, M. D.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 9, 1895.
I use Pond's Extract a great deal in my practice. I think it very valuable in all venous enlargements. J. L. BRADFORD, M. D.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL., Nov. 27, 1894.
I have been using Pond's Extract in my practice for twenty years. I frequently have the experience you mention of druggists insisting they can put up as good as yours. I don't believe it. I use Pond's Extract a great deal as an antiseptic in combination with glycerine and carbolic acid. I think it far superior to any antiseptic known. F. G. FLOURNOY, M. D.

COLUMBIA, PA., Jan. 18, 1895.
I have been a constant user of Pond's Extract since 1852, and do not expect to discontinue it while I live. S. ARMOR, M. D.

CHELSEA, MASS., Nov. 8, 1894.
I have made diseases of the skin a specialty for thirty years, and am free to say I know of no remedy that has given me such perfect satisfaction as Pond's Extract in cases for which it is recommended. G. W. BABCOCK, M. D.

ASTHMA'S INSTITUTE, Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 8, 1894.
I know Pond's Extract to be a valuable remedy, and shall continue its use whenever the opportunity offers. GEO. H. CALKINS, M. D.

I am pleased with the purity and strength of Pond's Extract. J. L. DUYER, M. D.

Easter Millinery
The Misses Cassidy, 23 George-st., have on view a magnificent stock of Easter millinery. It comprises all that is late and stylish in the world of fashion. Read their announcement in another column.

A Small Gold Mine
Kidd's boot and shoe store - 405 George St. - is a gold mine for those who require good footwear cheap.

Easter in Hand
And you want your picture for yourself and friends. You get them right at Cunningham & Co., 170 Charlotte street, three doors west of George street. No stairs to climb. Only ground floor studios in Peterborough.

They Didn't get Far
The team, belonging to Mr. Thomas Choate, farmer, became restive in the Market Square on Saturday afternoon. They "got a bit on," and ran around the square. However, their progress was arrested just opposite Mr. Kingsley's premises before any damage was done.

Navigation Notes
-The steamer Bellevue brought a load of passengers up from Harwood Saturday.
-Capt. Harris, with his tidy little steamer Beaver, commenced regular Saturday trips to Peterborough from the lower port.

An Expensive Disturbance
Samuel Moore and Alfred Peters appeared before Magistrate Dumble on Saturday charged with being drunk and creating a disturbance on Water-st. They were fined five dollars and costs each. In default of paying the money, Peters went to gaol for a thirty days' visit. Moore paid his own fine.

Fresh Strawberries, 25 cents a box. J. B. Oke, 418 George-St.

Yet Another Fire
The plague is not yet stayed. Shortly after half past three on Saturday morning the fire brigade received a call to Rubidge street, where the wooden barns of Mr. Charles Wynn, contractor, were in a blaze. The buildings and contents were quickly and entirely destroyed. The firemen were successful in saving the house near. There was an insurance of $250 on the outbuildings.

Fire Sale at Mason's
The recent fire at E. F. Mason & Co.'s has had the effect of slightly damaging by smoke the immense stock of groceries and provisions carried by this firm, and in order to facilitate renovation and make room for new goods, a clearing sale has been inaugurated and is now in full swing. Everything must go, and at almost your own price. Don't procrastinate! Call to-day!

Easter Will Decide It
Before proceeding with the delivery of his sermon at St. John's Church yesterday morning, the Rev. J. C. Davidson alluded to the proposed enlargement of the Sunday school buildings. He said that $1800 was on hand towards the $2500 required for the carrying out of the amended scheme, and the Easter offertories would determine whether the congregation were disposed to allow the work to proceed without increasing the Church's present indebtedness.

A Pointer for Peterborough
As a "pointer" for the Peterborough Light and Power Company, and what might be done in the way of lighting the surrounding villages, we record the fact that arrangements have been perfected for the placing of two electric plants, one at Napaine and the other at Newburgh, for the purpose of generating electricity for lighting Yarker, Newburgh, Camden East, Napaine Mills and Napaine. The incandescent system will be used. A Montreal firm will put in the plant and system.

How to Cure Skin Diseases
Simply apply "Swayne's Ointment." No internal medicine required. Cures tetter, eczema, itch, all eruptions on the face, hands, nose, &c., leaving the skin clear, white and healthy. Its great healing and curative powers are possessed by no other remedy. Ask your druggist for Swayne's Ointment. Lyman, Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents. Avoid substitutes.

Reduction of Interest
The reduction of the rate of interest in the savings banks of the Government will be detrimental to the progress of poor men and women who are patrons of these banks. Insurance companies will also suffer, because they have large deposits with the Government, on which they are granted a special rate of interest. This money would bring a larger revenue if invested in real estate. This reduction in interest will commence on July 1.

Pile-1 Piles: Itching Piles
Symptoms: Moisture intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate until become very sore. Swayne's Ointment stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration and in most cases removes the tumors. All druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Lyman Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents.

Excitement at the Fair
The flurry of snow on Saturday recalls the fact that we believe there is not a man living in Peterborough to-day who can recall a March without a snow storm. This month has distinguished itself in this way, as there has not fallen a flake of snow from the beginning up to the end of the month, the weather has been remarkably mild, only two heavy wind storms having occurred, and the average temperature will no doubt place the month on a line with any March in the last half century.

Last Month at Nicholas Hospital
The following is the report of the Nicholas Hospital for the month ending March 31st: No. of patients remaining in Hospital, 27; No. of patients treated, 56; No. of pay patients, 30; No. of free patients, 26; No. of patients from Peterborough, 34; No. of patients from other places, 22; No. of patients cured, 19; No. of patients improved, 8; No. of patients died, 1; Dr. King attending physician for the month; Physicians in attendance on private patients, Drs. Holliday, Boncher, Pigeon, Carmichael, Greer, Scott, Brown, McCullough and Young.

Eggs by the Pound
The law-makers at Ottawa are giving some needed attention to the egg measure. Among other reforms it is proposed to make the legal weight of a dozen of eggs a pound and a half. That is a step forward, and the proper thing to do is to make it imperative to sell eggs by weight, entirely abolishing the dozen. Some eggs weigh twice as much as others, and the present system of selling by the dozen is a premium upon small eggs. Make eggs saleable by the weight only and every man will get value for his money, and the better breeds of hens will be encouraged.

Shoeing and the Feet
A shoe dealer in Washington, D.C., where bicycling is widely followed by all classes of society, says that the epidemic increases the size of the foot. In one year's shoeing, he claims, the foot will grow from an inch to an inch and a half in dimensions. While this does not make so much difference to men, says the shoe-maker, women make the discovery of the increased size of their feet with grave apprehension. Cycling not only tends to lengthen the foot, but also to widen it. The shoe manufacturer, as a result, turn out many shoes for women of larger sizes than formerly. It is the old story coming true in another way. Those who dance must pay the piper. "I don't know," concluded the shoe-maker, "that it does a nice-looking girl any harm to widen or lengthen her foot a little, but they think it does. Still there's no getting away from it, and they have to grin and stand the consequences, or at least stand on the consequences."

Fresh Strawberries, 25 cents a box. J. B. Oke, 418 George-St.

Lost Her Purse
A Times reporter, while on the market on Saturday, noticed a little, ill-dressed girl, probably not more than ten years of age, weeping most bitterly. On being questioned as to the cause of her trouble, she said she had stopped at a table on the landing in the market building to fix her basket, and had laid down her purse on the table. She had gone back a few steps when she remembered that she had forgotten it, and ran back, but her purse had disappeared. If the purse was picked up by some one who is not evil-disposed it will be recovered, no doubt. If it is left at the Times office we will endeavor to find the owner, and thus help to make her little heart glad.

The New Market Regulation
The new regulations requiring all meat and potatoes to be weighed on the public scales is causing some dissatisfaction amongst vendors. However, it is a regulation that should be enforced. People have a right to know what they are getting for their money. On the other hand, the farmers and dealers complain of the trouble involved in the fee of 3 cents charged for the weighing of each bar. One gentleman was heard to remark that the new regulations meant giving away a bag of potatoes each time he came to market. The scales revealed innumerable cases of short-weight, and the vendors were weighing no more than 75 pounds.

In the West End
Here is a bit of incident of All Fools' Day. One young bandit in the West End was awakened about 3 o'clock in the morning by his wife, who said she could swear there were burglars in the house. He bravely jumped out of bed, and on his way down stairs in his bare feet he brought himself of "April Fool." He accordingly fired off a revolver and made a great fuss. His wife then heard from the lower regions a terrific voice shrieking, "For heaven's sake, Mary, come down. I've killed a man!" Then there was a silence, and the young hubby was left excused for leaving when he heard the answer, "All right, we'll see that the grave is kept green," but never a sign of Mary's home in sight. And now there is a discord in that family.

Circulation Manager
The rapid and steady growth of the Morning Times has made it imperative to have some responsible person in charge of this department of our business. We have engaged the services of Mr. L. C. Connor, of Galt, who is to take charge of the paper, employ a small army of carrier boys, and the complaints for non-delivery are so frequent that by the employment of a man to look after the boys we hope to overcome, in a large measure, this unpleasant feature. The Morning Times, we are pleased to say, is the popular paper of the people, not only in Peterborough but throughout the entire district. We are gradually pushing it into the outlying districts and the improvements which we are about to make in the paper when completed, will place it away in the lead in this part of the Dominion.

That Mayor Davis is a hustler.
That our streets are not over-placed for criminals.

That the school-children are happy over prospective Easter holidays.
That some day owners will buy tags earlier next year than they did this.
That the startling war dispatches we have read lately have had only one distinct feature—that of turning out to be incorrect.

That some men will wear their old hats to give their wives and daughters a new spring complexion.

That at least four of our councillors are aspiring for the Mayor's chair.

That our tax rate won't be any higher than it was last year.

That the cheap rates on the railways can't last much longer.

That no one knows who will come out best in that proposed street railway deal.

That good times are coming, and that we'll all go to Paris in 1900 to the World's Fair.

There are Others
Peterborough is not the only place in which complaints are made respecting the misbehavior of youthful citizens. A correspondent sends the following letter to the editor of the Ilwaco Standard:
"I take this liberty of placing before the public the question of the reformation of some of our young people. I refer to the notorious gang of young hoodlums, who parade the streets every night, indulging in every disgraceful act of their degraded minds. Why sir, no lady or young girl is safe from their vicious intentions. Everyday we hear of some new depredation committed by them. You might as well inform the parents. What's the use? In nine cases out of ten, their dearly beloved boys are upheld to any extent they may wish. The young men enforce the law, but what are we to do to enforce the law with truth? We have a constable-in name. Occasionally we hear of him taking some unfortunate to Peterborough after having received instructions to do so, but do we ever hear of him trying to enforce law and order on our streets? Never. Thoughts of his office never trouble him, except to draw his salary. No Mr. Editor, I assert with all earnestness that he should have some man appointed to the position of constable, who will enforce the laws of the country and municipality and that this gang mentioned above should be made an example of, and am sure that the majority of the citizens will heartily endorse my views."

REV. MR. ARMITAGE'S SERMON

He Hands for a Whole-hearted Surrender to Public Worship
Preaching at All Saints' church last evening on the words "O Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness," Rev. W. L. Armitage asked if people when they went to church assembled there actually for the purpose of worshipping God in the beauty of holiness.

How often was heard the question-and he had been pained to hear people say it-"Where are you going to-night?" And the reply would be, "I am going to such and such a place to hear such and such a person." He had even heard people say they were going to a Mr. Clark's church or a Mr. Jones' church, as if Mr. Clark or Mr. Jones and not God owned the whole building. While such things were said in carelessness and thoughtlessness, "holiness of the law" was no excuse, and God required something deeper. Did they go to that House set apart from all the world for the worship of God in order to hear a popular preacher? He did not wish to be misunderstood. He was not declaiming preaching the gospel, but he wished to impress upon them that they must go to church to worship God as well as to hear His word preached. They must worship God unitedly in the bond of peace and in the unity of the spirit, and it was the lack of this in the churches which he looked upon as the evil of Christianity to-day and for which he blamed the pulpit. There were many noble Christians who went into God's House who were only electing corpses. They knelt because others knelt; they sang because others sang; and they prayed because others prayed or because they had been taught to do so. This was not worship. What was their position in life or in the Church might be whatever they did toward God unless it was done with a whole-hearted surrender. It could not be acceptable in His sight.

Now

Is the time when you should take a Spring Medicine to purify your blood, give you good appetite, sound sleep, steady nerves and perfect digestion. That scrofulous taint, that skin trouble, that liver difficulty, that bilious tendency, that tired feeling, are all cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Give this medicine a fair trial and you will realize its positive merit. It is not what we say, but what the people who are cured say, which prove that

Take

Hood's Sarsaparilla Is the Best cure Liver Ills; easy to take, easy to operate. 25c.

-The Times Bookstore has placed on order for a fine lot of new books.

-Havelock Roman Catholic Church was again broken into last week. The religious offenders have not yet been traced.

-Drumpler Hubbs and Trooper Carey, of "C" squadron, 3rd P.W.D., have gone to Toronto for a three months' course of instruction at the Royal School of Cavalry.

-John Damm, a citizen of Belleville, was married at a distance from home and received this telegram from the old folks: "Accept congratulations from the whole Damm family."

-Rev. Mr. Patterson, of Cook's Church, Toronto, will begin a series of evangelistic services this evening at St. Andrew's church. He will also conduct services at St. Andrew's on Tuesday, and at St. Paul's on Thursday and Friday.

-We hear that Mr. A. T. Smith, formerly of Peterborough, inspector for the Bell Telephone Co. Kingston district, arrived home from Bermuda this week, after spending a couple of months there. Mr. Smith has fully recovered his health.

-We take the following from the Orillia Packet: Post office inspector Henderson came to town on Friday and installed Mr. Melville Mearns as postmaster of Orillia on Saturday morning. The new postmaster has since taken personal charge of the office, and things are running along smoothly and quietly once more. He has made no change in the staff so far as we can learn, and has no intention of making any.

The Contest Goes on
The Ottawa Club have published a strong but not altogether convincing reply to Mr. Dobson's letter on the C. W. A. meet from Peterborough's point of view.

The Toronto Telegram says: Mr. Dickson, who is representing the Ottawa cyclists in a visit through Western Ontario, is doing much for Western cities so it is said. There are many of the clubs who will not vote for Ottawa simply because their delegates pledged themselves at the Good Friday meeting a year ago to support Peterborough after that town had put in its application for the provincial championship of 1898. Toronto delegates will carry the majority of their votes for the near-by town. Quite a few of the city clubs have left the meeting a week from to-day with their hands free to vote which way they see fit. As Peterborough seems to have the sympathy, it is quite reasonable to suppose that they will get the bulk of the Toronto votes. Peterborough will have to look out for the smooth-tongued hustlers that will come from the capital, lest they might by their arguments turn them over.

The man who thinks it is fun to get drunk makes a fool of the humorous side of life consists of smiles.

The mother of six small children says it is hard work to get the rising generation out of bed of a cold morning.

THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT

A case once famous but now almost forgotten is recalled by the death of Arthur Orton, the Tichborne "claimant." That this coarse butcher from Australia could for a time impose upon even Lady Tichborne as her son and her husband's heir is less remarkable than the popular sympathy aroused for him in England when his identity was disputed.

People took sides in the case, and because the claimant was a coarse, ignorant fellow, and the Tichbornes were people of position and refinement, it was assumed they were persecuting him because of family pride, and this soundly adventurous actually posed and was accepted as a champion of "the masses" against "the classes."

Nothing could be more illogical or absurd, and yet it is just as illogical and absurd ideas that often sway popular sympathies. Even when the facts were established before a jury, some ignorant people still insisted that Orton was Sir Roger Tichborne. Of course the fellow was found out at last and he ended his days in drink, the money for which was obtained by his writing his "confession," and for which he was paid a handsome sum by the proprietors of The People newspaper of England.

SPANISH PATRIOTISM AND COURAGE

The great mistake of the Jingo is in their contemptuous disparagement of the Spanish nation. Senator Morrey, of Mississippi, for example, asserts that the Spaniards have accomplished nothing in war worth mentioning for a century. The Jingo Senator has read history to little purpose. One of the most memorable modern exhibitions of national patriotism and courage was the uprising of the peasant and burghers of Spain against Napoleon and his invading armies. Although these armies were composed of disciplined troops, familiar with victory and led by Napoleon's ablest Marshals, the Spanish volunteers were more than a match for them. While the burghers obstinately withstood sieges, the peasants hung on the rear of the French armies, cut off their supply trains, surprised their outposts, and occasionally won important engagements in the field. These rude peasants, in fact, compelled the retreat of Napoleon from Spain and opened the way for the march of the British army into France. To them belongs the honor of making the first check to the victorious career of Napoleon, and of thus powerfully contributing to his downfall.

It would be a great error to assume that because of their poverty the Spanish people are no longer capable of making war. While it is true that they are no match for the States in financial resources or in military power, it will not do to disparage their patriotism and courage. These are virtues which have never been denied them, whatever else may be said of their national character.

Peace and war are now in the scales, and it looks as if there was going to be short wait in the ultimate decision.

Spain is hardly built for a long contest. Her arms don't amount to much and her chest development is very poor.

Whether in a nation or an individual, empty pride is at least as bad as an empty pocket. There's nothing in it.

It's just as true these doings in China should come under the head of real estate transfer as that the historian may be the recorder of deeds in connection with them.

The Intercolonial Railway officials report a great increase of both through and local traffic, and with regard to the latter particularly of the Drummond County section is fully up to the expectations of its promoters. It is possible that in the near future a twenty-four hour express between Montreal and Halifax will be inaugurated by the Intercolonial Railway. Many patrons of the line were afraid the road bed of the new section would preclude the possibility of making this time. Experience, however, has shown that not only can the present schedule be maintained, but it is evidence that much better can be done without difficulty. The new arrangement will probably go into effect before the summer travel begins.

THE MONTH OF APRIL A COLORING AND RE-CREATING TIME

Diamond Dyes Make Old Things Look as Well as New

This is the great spring month for using Diamond dyes. Old, faded and dingy looking dresses, costumes, skirts, blouses, jackets, capes, shawls, and suits for men and boys are usually looked over with a view of fitting them for another season's wear.

The dyeing operation is an important one and demands care. The great point is to get the right dyes—colors that are pure, bright and warranted fast to washing and sunlight.

The Diamond dyes—the only guaranteed dyes in the world—possess all the important virtues for the production of perfect colors. The popular and tested Diamond dyes have such an immense demand all over the world that unscrupulous dealers, for the sake of large profits, sell vile imitations. If you would have your garments and goods colored richly and permanently avoid all such imitations.

Refuse all dyes that your dealer tells you are just as good as the "Diamond." Write for book of directions and color card; sent post free to any address by Wells & Richardson Co., Montreal, P.Q.

To Klondike With a Wheelbarrow
Of all the methods of going to Klondike, surely the wheelbarrow is the least attractive, says the Birmingham, Eng., Post. Yet we learn that an Irishman has arrived at Liverpool this week equipped for the arduous journey with nothing better than the common or garden wheelbarrow. But it is a wonderful specimen of its kind, for its owner has already trundled it all over Australia. It can be converted into a sleeping compartment, and he has packed it with cooking utensils, tinned food, and mining tools. The hopeful adventurer is alleged to be nearly seventy years of age. We should have thought that he was much older; for only a person in his dotage could dream of setting out for Klondike with such an equipment. The man can have no idea of the nature of the ground he will have to cover. Fancy hauling a wheelbarrow up the icy mountain recently illustrated in the Weekly Post. The project is about as feasible as it would be for a Highlander to tramp to Dawson City in the gear of old Gaul. It was only to be expected that the arrival of this benighted Irishman and his barrow at Liverpool should have occasioned much amusement. The authorities would be doing a charitable act if they prevented such a hazardous venture. The undertaking as he contemplates it is no better than suicide. It is a striking evidence, however, of the lust for gold, that a man who has almost lived the allotted span should have the fever as badly as hot-blooded youth.

The Wheelman's Point of View
Now that the bicycling season may be said to have arrived, wheelmen are giving some thought as to the necessity of improving the principal roads, ways leading out of town and of having at least some of the work done this summer. They feel that it would not be wise to ask the Council to place a subscription for the purpose in the estimate for the year, which will be drawn up shortly, as the town has sustained a serious loss through the damage to its bridges an general demoralization resultant from the recent flood, so what money is required for the purpose will have to be raised by wheelmen themselves. If a tax of 25 cents were imposed upon each bicycle, it is believed over a hundred dollars could be procured with which to make a start. The Townships adjacent might be induced to do something, since the construction of cinder paths through their territory would be as much a convenience to the farmers as it would be a pleasure to residents of the town. Many of the former now own bicycles, and use them in preference to horse and buggy for short business trips to town. If for several miles along the sides of the principal arteries of traffic leading into Peterborough cinder paths could be laid down, it would attract wheelmen on pleasure outings to this place and would mean something to local business men. The bicycle clubs ought to take the matter in hand at once.

THE DAIRY

MILK-BORN DISEASES.

Fortunate Reasons for Cleanly Cows in Every Dairy.

The British Medical Journal has recently published a report on the subject of milk-borne diseases. It contains much matter for the consideration of Statisticians and public health officers. It shows that the cause of 95 outbreaks of disease affecting 2,000 individuals, and causing the death of 100, was milk.

Because the bacteria, which infects the milk while in the cow's udder, scarletina and diphtheria have been traced to the gentle cow. Outbreaks of scarlet fever have occurred in families using the milk of cows which were affected with a mild skin eruption on the udders and teats, diphtheria, where milk from healthy cows was mixed with that from a case of scarlet on inflammation of the udder. Instances are given of infection with these diseases when all the circumstances seem to exclude any other source of contagion than the milk.

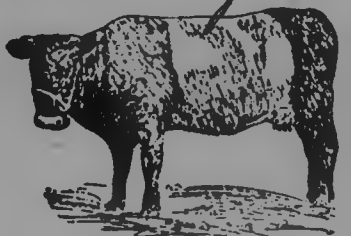

Then comes the typical case of 45 outbreaks of which are traced to milk which had become infected in one of several ways. Sometimes the water used to wash the pails, etc. (or to dilute the milk) had been contaminated by sewage. Sometimes the cows had been drinking impure water, and occasionally the connection between the milk and the disease could not be traced, although evidently present. Cases of illness in the families of dairymen were the cause of several outbreaks of disease, and this discloses a source of danger overlooked in ordinary dairy inspection.

This ghastly array of facts forms a serious indictment against an indispensable article of food and makes an irrefragable argument in favor of frequent dairy inspection. If milk-producers would observe the following simple rules there would be very little disease conveyed by milk.

1. Use only the milk of healthy cows, and make sure of this by the tuberculin test, if possible.
2. Do not use milk of cows with any unnatural condition of the udder, such as eruptions, swellings, etc.
3. Use only pure water in connection with the dairy.
4. Keep milk only in sanitary surroundings (clean milk room apart from dwelling rooms).
5. In case of doubt, boil the milk.

The Dutch Belted Cattle.

Mr. Orson D. Munn, one of the editors of The Scientific American, is justly proud of the handsome herd of Dutch belted cattle which are much admired by the lovers of fine stock who visit his place, Llewellyn Park, Orange, N.J. At the New Jersey State Fair, out of thirteen head exhibited seven took first prizes and two were awarded second. At the five stock exhibition held in Madison Square Garden in 1895, thirteen prizes were awarded for the herd and separate animals composing it. A herd of sixteen Dutch belted cattle, it will be remembered by breeders, was awarded the highest prize of prize obtained by any cattle exhibit at the World's Fair, when there were probably more cattle of various breeds gathered together than ever before.

A DUTCH BELTED HEIFER.

"The Dutch belted or blanket breed of cows," said Mr. Munn, "are native of Holland and are a distinct family from the Holsteins, with which many have as yet been imported into this country, although the breed antedates the seventeenth century. In Holland they are owned and controlled by the nobility. In color they are very black, with a continuous pure white belt around their body, which makes a strikingly beautiful contrast. Their form is usually very fine and their constitutions most hardy, enabling them to stand sudden changes in climate and to thrive on any variety of fodder. As milk producers they are excellent."

What Makes the Profitable Cow?

We are often asked, how much should a cow test, in order to be profitable? says Hoard's Dairyman. We reply to these questions, by saying that neither quantity nor quality is a sufficient basis for answering. The recent tests of cows at the New England Fair, Portland, Me., affords a conspicuous illustration of this fact, as also of the other fact, that one-day tests may be a sufficient basis for answering. The recent tests of cows at the New England Fair, Portland, Me., affords a conspicuous illustration of this fact, as also of the other fact, that one-day tests may be a sufficient basis for answering. The recent tests of cows at the New England Fair, Portland, Me., affords a conspicuous illustration of this fact, as also of the other fact, that one-day tests may be a sufficient basis for answering.

When, however, the milk of these cows was tested, it appeared that the greater quantity had only 4 per cent. fat in it, while the lesser quantity carried 6.1 per cent. Too many men would hastily conclude that the higher testing cow was decidedly the better of the two, and in fact she did yield a trifle more fat, but scarcely more than enough to compensate for what she lost in the value of her skim milk. In truth, so far as the one-day experiment could show, these two cows were so nearly equal in the money value of their product, that there was no room left for choice. A decision based upon either quantity or quality of the milk, would have been decidedly misleading. Only when both are considered can a reliable conclusion be reached.

A REMARKABLE PROPHECY

The Beginning of the End of Good Friday

The Millennium at Hand—Facts and Figures to bear out This Forecast Which Appears All Right

If J. B. Dimbleby, of Warrington, is to be believed, it will be well for people to go early to church on Easter Sunday morning, return and take a more or less light breakfast and wait some interesting events. That gentleman has just published a very startling document entitled "The New Era at Hand" (London, 1898), in which he shows that there is approaching for that date the close of prophetic periods, and he gives what he deems to be biblical and astronomical facts and proofs relating to the Great Assize which is to be held by the Ancient of Days on "that day," Easter Sunday, 1898, the end of the Gentile and Jewish times is to come, also the "Resurrection of the Just," "the Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ and the Restoration of the Jewish Kingdoms, and the Millennium." The method of calculation by which Mr. Dimbleby arrives at this startling conclusion is very ingenious and interesting. He relies on the following prophecies:

- (1) Rev. xi. 2. "The Gentiles shall tread under foot the holy city for 42 months."
- Now 42 months—1260 days, averaging each month at 30 days. Therefore, 1260 years after the Conquest of Jerusalem by the Moslem, which occurred 637 A.D. Therefore within twelve months of 1897 the Turk must go.

- (2) Dan. vii. 25. "They" the saints, "shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time."

A time—360 years. Times—720 years. Dividing of time—180 years—1260 years x 637 = 1897.

- (3) Dan. ix. 23. "Till seven times pass over him. (Nebuchadnezzar.) Seven times—360 x 7 = 2520 years. Nebuchadnezzar's Empire began 621 B.C. 2520—621 B.C. = 1898 A.D.

- (4) Dan. ix. 24. "Unto 2300 days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." 2300 days—2300 lunar years—2300 solar years. Alexander began, 331 B.C. 2300—331 B.C. = 1898 A.D.

But a ninefold operation, in which human and solar years are adroitly mingled, the same result is obtained, and this leads Mr. Dimbleby to the conclusion that "The best way of dealing with it is by the spheroidal measurement. We then get to the end of the Gentile times at Easter, 1898. This is the point of time fixed by several passages of Scripture. Jerusalem cannot be trodden down a moment later than 1898 A.D. unless we can quench the sun and stop the rotation of the earth." We are told, to sum up, that "the first thing to happen is to be the Advent in mid-heaven of the Ancient Days or the Everlasting God. All the holy dead and all the living saints are caught up into the air, where they will give judgment upon the Turks, who will be given to the flames; and will follow the restoration of the Jews and the beginning of the Millennium."

This is not altogether new. From remotest periods the dreamings of Daniel and the seeing visions by St. John on "Patmos" lonely isle, have given students opportunities of becoming muddled on the subjects of the end of the world, the millennium, and the beginning of the millennium.

A TREASURE ESCORT

The dawn of a February morning in 1822 was breaking pale and wan, with a chill air under flying, drifting clouds, as a young girl, who had come up out of the purlieus of Westminster behind the sanctuary, approached the river. She was making for the bridge, not the beautiful modern structure, but the old one, with its arches and recesses, which were still incumbered by the wails and strays of the great city who had sought this comfortless shelter for the night. She pressed on at a rapid pace, almost running in her eagerness to cover the ground and be at her journey's end.

Here was a momentous perchance a perilous mission, accepted on the spur of the moment, without a moment's hesitation, as involving great issues—the fortunes, the fate and future of one most dear to her. She must get to Woolwich that very morning and warn them. A dark, deep plot was being hatched, as she held the clew. The mischief might be prevented, her father saved, if only she could reach Woolwich in good time. Once there, she would make a compact with them, would sell her information. The price should be the rescue of her father, but long suffering, sorely tried her father, whom overwhelming trouble and misfortune had led astray.

Inez Verschoyle, this poorly clad slip of a girl, whose dark, handsome face and gracious gliding walk hinted at southern—possibly Spanish—descent, was of gentle birth. Her father was an officer of Horse artillery, who had served through the peninsula war as lieutenant in one of the most famous batteries and was as distinguished as any man who wore "the jacket." But he had been placed on half pay before the peace for a breach of military discipline, and he had always strenuously denied, protesting that he was the victim of a gross error. His career had been blighted. Nothing prospered with him. He could not live decently on the small pittance, a few shillings a day, all that a grateful country awarded the man who had fought and bled in its service.

How well Inez remembered the first appearance of the man who had led her father astray! He had come to their poor lodging in a court off the Horseferry road, calling himself Hiram Eldridge.

There was no surer way to poor Verschoyle's heart than to take his sides against the military authorities, whom he believed had so grievously misused him. Mr. Eldridge said he knew all about it.

"I am satisfied that you shall seek redress. Present a memorial; have the case reopened. They will be bound to right you, to restore you to full pay. If I can be of any use, command me. I am thought to be skillful with my pen."

The memorial was duly sent to the Horse guards, and in due course answered with the stereotyped words that "the commander in chief saw no reason to reverse the decision already arrived at in the case of Lieutenant Verschoyle, late R.H.A."

In the fresh access of rage and despair that now overtook the unhappy man, he found a very kindly echo in Eldridge. The latter swore roundly that it was the most monstrous piece of injustice ever known, that it should go before parliament, that Verschoyle was really being robbed and plundered and was entitled to revenge himself to make any sort of reprisals.

"Who could blame you if you did turn highwayman, or broke into a money's pay office, or laid hands upon a lump of public money wherever you found it?"

"At least I should blame myself," said the old officer with much dignity. "You forget, Mr. Eldridge, that I am a gentleman still, a parson's gentleman, perhaps, but noble and obliging, and I have eaten the king's salt, worn the king's uniform. I bear the king's commission still."

In those days—a survival of worse, years back, when the conveyance of specie had been a hazardous business and "gentlemen of the road" infested all wild and lonely places—it was still the rule to send cash down to Woolwich under escort. Once a month a clerk from Cox's traveled from Craig's court in a post chaise bearing the money to pay the officers and men of the Royal artillery. (The amount was large—sometimes between £7,000 and £8,000—and the risk at one time was undoubtedly great.) The route lay across Blackheath common, a locality with a most evil reputation—as bad as that of the Humpstead Heath. Special precautions were therefore taken for the safe conduct of the treasure, and a sergeant's escort of Horse artillery was invariably detailed to meet the post chaise en route, generally at the sign of the Green Man, in Blackheath village, and escort it safely into Woolwich.

Eldridge was fully conversant with all these facts, and had long and its raid upon the post chaise and its valuable load. The main difficulty in plotting the operation was to find a confederate who could organize and command a mock escort, which would nominally protect and really carry off the treasure.

"Yes, I could do that, I think," said Verschoyle gloomily. He did not like the business into which hard necessity was driving him. "We should want men, arms, uniforms, horses. It will cost money."

All this Eldridge promised. "There is one point on which I am not clear," went on Verschoyle. "How do you propose to deal with the real escort? Are we to void it or forestall it, or to fight, or what? Not the last, I trust. I do not care to face real horse guards, good men and true, with my scratch peck, recruited G.I. knows how or where."

"No fighting, of course," nervously interrupted Eldridge. "It's not my profession. But I have a very pretty plan."

"There must be no violence, except at the last extremity," sternly observed Verschoyle.

"By no means."

After this the preparations proceeded apace. The month of February was fixed for the attempt, and Christmas was already at hand. A bare five or six weeks was little enough to get all ready, and in a way to satisfy the exacting and fastidious lieutenant.

Meanwhile there was a change for the better in the poor home of Horseferry road. Money was no longer scarce, food was on the table, port wine and champagne for the sick mother; the doctor came back, for he was now certain of his fee.

And all the time Inez Verschoyle was waiting for the day when her father would be restored to full pay, and she would be a free woman.

GOVERNOR OF VERMONT

Josiah Grout Sends an Open Letter to the Proprietors of

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND.

The present Governor of the Green Mountain State, though born in Canada, has lived in Vermont since he was 6 years old. His course at the St. Johnsbury Academy was interrupted in 1861 by his enlistment in Co. I, 1st Vermont Cavalry. He was mustered in as second lieutenant, promoted to captain the following year, and in 1864 made major of the 20th New York Cavalry.

Major Grout participated in 17 engagements, and was badly wounded in a skirmish with the celebrated Confederate leader, Mosby.

At the close of the war he entered the law office of his brother, Gen. Grout, and was admitted to the bar. His service in the Vermont legislature embraced the years 1872, '83, '86 and '88. He was speaker of the House for three years and Senator in 1892.

Gov. Grout is deeply indebted to Paine's Celery Compound for the good health which he to-day enjoys. He expresses his conviction of the value of the great remedy in the following few words:

State of Vermont, Executive Department,
July 5, 1897.
Wells & Richardson Co.:

long absence, the coming and going of strange, rough men, the delivery of many parcels, the contacts of which sometimes saw, and with increasing uneasiness recognized as parts of an artilleryman's kit—these things filled her with great alarm. Then her father was so changed. He seldom spoke to her, only once when she gently upbraided him he kissed her and patted her hands, saying: "Wait dear child, wait. It will soon be over. I am engaged in some important matters. When they are ended—it will be very soon now—we shall be rich and happy together."

But chance, a few words overheard, set her to find out more, and she became possessed of the whole shameful secret he very night before the attempt was to be made.

The road to Woolwich this morning she marched along was long and full of nameless terrors. The clocks pointed to nine as she passed through Blackheath and got upon the common. Half an hour more brought her into Charlton, the worst part of her journey, for she traversed the open heath and might be at any time observed and intercepted. From Charlton across the common it was but a couple of miles to the great artillery barracks, which she had presently seen, red-fronted, a long row of imposing buildings facing her, the end of her journey. It was barely half past ten when she reached the barrack gate, and almost breathlessly asked for the commandant.

The sergeant on duty, a smart artilleryman in this tight uniform, and wearing the Waterloo medal, looked at her with admiring, yet suspicious eyes. "What might your business be? Taint so easy to see the commandant."

"I have something to tell him, something very important. There is no time to lose."

She was shown at once into the ad-

Gentlemen.—Having realized a benefit from the use of Paine's Celery Compound I hereby endorse the preparation as a reliable remedy that fully meets the claims made for it.

JOSIAH GROUT.

Life is too short to waste one day of it sick, abed, grumpy or ailing. Indigestion, nervousness and rheumatism make one old before one's time, take the heart out of work, and make one a burden at home, and a bore to one's friends. Every one owes it to his family, to his friends, to his success and happiness to get strong and stay so.

Worn-out nerves bring on more ill health and disease than all other causes put together. In their impoverished condition they cause the blood to become thin, weaken the digestion and make the heart work with difficulty.

The main factor in radiating neuralgia, rheumatism, nervousness, headache and sleeplessness from the system consists in making the nerves stronger. Paine's Celery Compound is the nerve invigorator par excellence. Better nerve nutrition plays the principal part in the successful treatment of liver, kidney and heart disease, as well as nervous diseases.

jutant's presence, but, having reached her goal, her courage suddenly failed. She could frame no connected sentence.

"Please—please—you must send—the escort—the escort—at once," was all she could utter.

"Well, but what is it?" went on the sergeant. "Something serious, of course. Your father? We all know him very well. Is he well? Not is that your trouble? Tell us, my child. Perhaps we may be able to help you."

It was a more painful now; it was agony indeed, to tell the shameful story to these two brother officers of her father's, these honorable and chivalrous gentlemen such as her father once was, but to which high estate he had forfeited all claim. Still she took heart from her despair, goaded onward by the nearness of the danger, the need for immediate action.

"I don't understand it, not one little bit," said the colonel, when he had listened to the end. "Surely!"

"You know, sir," interrupted the adjutant, with a nod of assent, "the escort was not to go over to-day. It was countermanded. We had a letter from Cox & Co. this morning saying their man could not start—the cash was not ready or something."

"That is part of their scheme. Can't you see?" cried Inez, springing to her feet and speaking with hysterical eagerness. "We had a letter from Cox & Co. this morning saying their man could not start—the cash was not ready or something."

"The cash escort is to take the place of the other—of yours from here—and the money is to be stolen from the post chaise. You must send a troop at least. Let them gallop and overtake the robbers, let them—"

"Ah! but a troop of horse would be a great help. A sergeant and a couple of majors entered. It was Verschoyle."

"The pay clerk has arrived, sir, and something odd appears to have happened on the road," he said hurriedly.

Every one knows that the heart does the work of a pump. From the dawn of life till death it never ceases pumping blood into the arteries, and every heart-beat results from a nerve impulse. When the nerve centres become reduced there follows a gradual increasing feebleness, the heart beats irregularly, there is a loss of nervous and muscular force, the limbs refuse their support, appetite fails and sleep becomes unobtainable. The progress toward a heartier appetite, sounder sleep, firmer pulse, shows the profound invigorating effect of Paine's Celery Compound upon the nerve fibres all over the body.

Progress toward health is steady and uniform when Paine's Celery Compound is employed. It stops night sweats—that sure indication of growing feebleness and of wasting disease—and there is a noticeable freedom from those nervous twitches of the muscles and numbness in the limbs that are precursors of paralysis and painful chorea, so common among overworked, worried people who are about to break down with some form of nervous debility.

"We have brought you in the treasure, Colonel Torrens, but not without a scrimmage. The others showed some fight—all but that gallant fellow there who fell in on the right side. They were poor rogues, though, and I think I could have accounted for the lot alone and single handed. The gentleman with the cash is inside, and another chap, Eldridge, who will be safer per- haps in the barrack guard. We have secured him, but not before he had plotted the postboy."

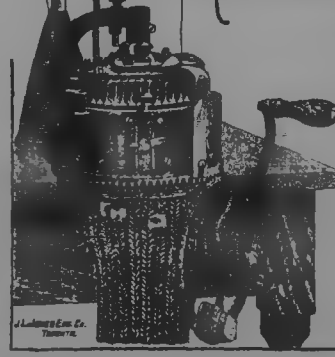

It was thought best not to make the affair public. Eldridge was allowed to leave the country, and the rights of the story were never exactly known. There were some doubts expressed of the bona fides of Lieutenant Verschoyle and some said that he should have given earlier information. Whether his conscience only awakened tardily, or whether he wished to let the conspiracy take its course so as to have the credit of interposing to rescue the money, was a matter of doubt. But his friends were willing to accept the result without too close inquiry into the antecedent facts. Interest was made for Verschoyle, and he was given a command under Sir De Lacy Evans, in the Spanish contingent. Later he became British consul at one of the principal ports in Spain.

Inez eventually married an artillery officer and had pleasant experiences of Woolwich than those of her first visit—Major Arthur Griffiths in Illustrated London News.

JUDGMENT DELIVERED

Magistrate Dumble's Decision in an Interesting Police Court Case

At the Police Court yesterday morning Magistrate Dumble delivered judgment as follows in the case of a young man charged with breaking a plate glass window on George street.

The defendant herein is charged under the Code, Sec. 488, with having wilfully committed injury to a building by breaking glass.

The evidence shows that defendant while walking down George street was set on by a dog, which jumped up and seized him by the arm, tearing his coat. It appears to have been a quick, short attack, for the man at once passed on, the dog remaining with its owner.

When twenty-five yards from the dog the man stepped into the road and getting a stone slipped back to the sidewalk and threw it viciously, and apparently with force, at the dog.

The man was on the outside of the walk, the dog on the inner side. Opposite the dog and along for a considerable distance were plate glass windows. The stone missed the dog, striking the walk this side of him, and, after bounding several times, struck the window, and broke the window pane, worth $80. It was evident that the man was excited and angry, and in throwing the stone meant to punish the dog. The breaking of the glass was a result not intended, however probable.

The question is: Is the defendant criminally liable for wilfully injuring the property?

The defendant's counsel quotes the only case to be found of a similar character. The Queen vs. Pemberton, L.R. 2 C.C.P. 119.

This is a case where a man who was fighting in a street threw a stone at an opponent, which missed its mark and broke a pane of glass. The information was laid under 2425 Vic. Ch. 27, Sec. 51, and charged defendant with "wilfully and maliciously," etc.

And in that case the jury found that there was no malicious intent to break the glass and the court found the verdict of acquitted, right, the being negatived.

The case is thoroughly reviewed in the Queen vs. Latimer, 17 Q. B. D. 1886, and the Queen vs. Martin 8 Q. B. 54, Moore's criminal evidence, pages 22, 679 and 716.

Our criminal code drops drops the word "maliciously," and sec. 488 defines the word "wilfully" as follows: "Everyone who causes any event by an act while he knew would probably cause it, being reckless whether such an event happens or not, is deemed to have caused it wilfully for the purposes of this part."

Now the defendant in this matter was not attacked by the dog. He was 75 feet away and could have gone on his way—but he vented his anger and like most excited angry men, he acted foolishly. All the way from his stool and away beyond were plate glass windows. He threw a stone from the outside to the inside of the sidewalk, where he could hardly fail to break a window.

Was he not utterly reckless whether he broke the window or not—or was he so filled with passion that he was blind to all possible results of his action?

A moment's consideration, or good sense would have been sufficient to prevent him, but he did not give it.

I can make allowances for him being angry and revengeful, but he is a man in that frame of mind, while desiring to destroy the dog—the property of one man—to be at liberty to destroy the property of another with impunity. It was not self-defence; the attack was over and he was at a safe distance.

The above authorities do not hold and I am of opinion that the defendant was so reckless that he cannot claim the damages as the result of an action for which he was not responsible.

The question is a very fine one, and as I am not trying the offender I feel that it should be sent for trial that a competent court may deal with it.

The defendant will be committed for trial at the next sitting of the next court of competent jurisdiction.

3. Your committee recommend that they be authorized to have a stand built up in No. 4 ward, and also one in No. one ward if it is required.

4. That tenders be asked for laying block or three blocks of concrete pavement on George street and that specifications be prepared by the town engineer and submitted to this committee.

5. Your committee authorized tenders for street watering and received the following:

As J. H. Cameron, who is the lowest tender in two divisions, has chosen the Southern division, and your committee recommend that the contract for the Southern division be awarded to J. H. Cameron, for the Western division to Edward Welsh, and for the Northern division to George McClellenn, at the prices named in their tenders.

All of which is respectfully submitted. Coun. Robertson moved that the report be amended by giving the contract for the Western district to Mr. Cameron, and the Southern to Mr. Bolton, and be adopted as amended.

He explained that Mr. Bolton's tender was erroneously placed in the Western district.

Coun. Denne seconded the motion, which was agreed to.

MORE SCALES WANTED.
Coun. Robertson moved that the Market Committee be empowered to ask for tenders for two pairs of scales for use on the market to weigh potatoes and meat, and to build a suitable platform.

Coun. W. H. White seconded. Coun. Denne said it was necessary to build a platform at once and to have a cover over it to protect the scales in bad weather.

Mr. Raptie, market clerk, said it was absolutely necessary for something to be done without delay. They mustn't have another day like last Saturday (laughter).

The Mayor: Couldn't you survive it? The motion was agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS
On the motion of Coun. W. H. White, seconded by Coun. Robertson, the council decided to instruct the street inspector to make out a list of all the tools belonging to the town for the Property Committee.

Coun. McWilliams introduced a by-law authorizing the execution of contracts for street watering for the town of Peterborough for the year 1898. The by-law passed its three readings and was adopted.

Coun. Best asked if any communication had been received with reference to a further grant for the Eastern division in respect of the Trent Valley Canal. If not, he thought it advisable that a deputation should wait on the Government and press upon them the making of a further grant.

Biliousness

The Mayor said that if the canal was to be completed Peterborough would have to fight for it.

It was understood that the Mayor would call a meeting of the Sub-committee of the Joint committee, consisting of members of the County Council and Town Council, to consider the matter.

COULD DO NO WORK.

"Large sores broke out on my body, head and limbs, and also on my hands, so that I could do any work, and my hair came out. My trouble was called eczema. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. When I had taken several bottles the sores and itching disappeared and I was cured." Mrs. J. G. Brown, Brantford, Ont.

HOOD'S PILLS are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla. Cure all liver ills.

—Mr. G. L. Schafer and three line-men were engaged yesterday in fixing up slack wires and generally overhauling the telephone system.

—The slaughter amongst the deer by the wolves this year is reported to be something unparalleled in the vicinity of Bottle and Sucker Lakes, in Cavenish township. By the establishment of lumber shanties farther north the deer have been driven in closer to the settlers, who have in consequence seen more of the wolves than heretofore.

—Mr. A. J. Smith of Woodville, agent for Acetylene gas plants, recently installed a machine in the Queen's hotel, in that village. Something went wrong with it the other day, and A. J. Smith, hunting for the cause of the trouble with a lamp in hand—and found it. It was a leak, and the escaping gas, being ignited by the lamp, caused a lively explosion. Mr. Smith lost his eyelashes and eyebrows, and his face was badly burned. Luckily there was very little gas in the generator or the consequence might have been very serious for all concerned.

For that tired feeling you must enrich and purify your blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the medicine you need.

Fresh Strawberries, 25 cents a box. J. B. Oke, 418 George-St.

There are many soaps in the market but only one

Eclipse Soap

Have you noticed the difference between good and bad soap? One hurts your hands and eats up your linen and shrinks your flannels. Eclipse does none of these things—simply washes without injury. Try a bar from your grocer.

YOUR TIME WILL COME.

It is not the hopeless that achieve, the faltering foot that reaches goals; No web of gain can fortune weave. From the realm of receding souls, Madrep, Repeal fear's icy clutch, That faint would pluck your heart away; See barriers crumble at your touch, And know your time will come some day.

Yes, "all things come to him who waits," But meanwhile you must labor, too; Harred shall remain possession's gates "Till your strong hand has hewn and, Armed with most steadfast purpose, learn Beyond the clouds of chance to stray The certain sunlight to discern, And feel your time will come some day.

Oh, tamed, sprit! Hail elate All borrowing time, whips and strings That come, because their chattering weight The soul to higher stature brings! And strength redoubled shall replace The blood that trickles as they fly; The way is long, but yours the race; Surely your time will come some day!

"REPLY PAID."

She had received a letter in the morning begging her to somehow procure him a little money. Things were going badly and he had been ill. She thought of it all day long, having detached the little she had, and for the thinking, things looked no better. Her brother had not enough to live upon, and there was an end of it. Fate was niggardly with them all. During the afternoon the girls came in, and Mrs. Hamlin. Mrs. Hamlin was always delightful and cheery. Her lovely dresses and sweet face and fragrant elegance reminded Maise that at least she was the right person in the right place—with fitting surroundings, and the beautiful things of life that all women instinctively claim as their right.

"Maise, you look preposterously dejected. What is it? Are you in love with an anarchist, or is it only general aspirations towards the impossible?" "No, I am not in love, but I am thinking of proposing to some one."

"Why?"

"Because I am in a hurry. Fred, you know, is frightfully hard up."

"But why don't you accept Mr. Howard when he's so devoted, poor man?"

"That wouldn't be fair, because, you see, he is devoted, and I—no, I think a fat man with beard and glasses is the sort of thing—in the abstract. Protects you, is kind to you, and gives you cheques."

"Dear Mrs. Hamlin, don't! The matter is not discussable in the concert hall. 'Fancy Maise proposing!' said one of the girls."

"You don't know what I am capable of," returned Maise.

"Till dare you Maise!" Mrs. Hamlin twinkled. "220 oh, and I'll give you a month."

"Twenty pounds!" repeated Maise, and there was an odd sound in her voice.

"Done!" she said, to the astonishment of the room. "It's a bet!"

Everyone sat up and bristled with delighted curiosity. Maise, of all people, who invariably treated her swains with a good-natured scorn that was the envy of her friends.

"I will do it now!" she went on, excitedly. "Maise, give me those telegram forms. Of course, I won't undertake to carry out the contract if anyone accepts," she added.

"No, no; but a bona-fide proposal!" She then sat down and addressed seven telegrams, and despatched them by her maid. "Reply paid," she said. "And now, we'll have tea."

"What have you done?" questioned Mr. Hamlin.

"I have asked seven men to marry me!"

"Maise!"

"Well, seven gentlemen will hardly be able to think that I am pining for them all; and they'll exchange notes."

"Men never do that."

"Ah, what men never do, that purely man always does," Maise laughed. "Honour with them as a collective virtue that has no application in the singular. You shall read the answers."

In due course of time the answers came. One by one the girls opened them before her expectant friends, who refused to go till all had come. "Repeal," quoth Maise, holding up one with mock gravity. "Next, please."

"Ah! thank you Susan! Sorry, previous engagement—'Alas! impossible!'"

"Circumstances over which I have no control—I would if I could, but I can't!"

"No!—That's rather impolite, and he really—well, one mustn't be kissed and left. I was so long ago, too. You see, ladies, how devoted my lovers all are; but I have won my bet. Ah! here is another, one more polite refusal. No! Of course I am honored," she read. A crimson flush of shame spread over the girl's laughing face. "That's chivalrous of him," she said, trying to hide her embarrassment. "And now to invent a polite refusal to my own proposal!"

Miss Hamlin.

A very amusing collection of mixed metaphors by well-known French authors has been brought together by Th. Revue des Revues. The following are a few specimens:

Francisque Sarcy: "You recognize her mother's hand in Mlle. Marguerite Ugalde's voice."

P. de Saint-Victor: "Ezekiel transcribes and comments on sacred verse. He reads with one eye. He writes with the other."

P. du Terrail: "He seized him with one hand by the throat, and with the other he spat in his face."

Flaubert: "His birthday present was a fine phonological head, all painted in blue, and marked with letters down to the throat."

J. J. Ampere, describing Egyptian giants: "Their feet are as large as five of mine."

NORWAY AND SWEDEN

VULETIDE CUSTOMS IN THE LAND OF THE VIKINGS.

Superstitions Regarding Nissen, the Scandinavian Santa Claus—Franks of the Hired Men—Legend of the Brothers Ulv and Grimm.

The peasantry of Norway and Sweden generally build their homes as near each other as convenient. Often five to seven families live adjoining, constituting a miniature village. After the first day has passed the enjoyment commences. Dancing is the principal enjoyment for the youth, while the old people and the children stay at home and rehearse "Nissen," or "Tomtegubben," as he also is called. The latter is a miniature being that corresponds in many respects to the Scotch brownie, but is quite Santa Clauslike in general appearance. The tales that are told have been handed down from generation to generation, and were at one time believed, and even in some districts considerable credence is still given to what is stated about these unnatural beings.

Nissen is the being that is of the greatest interest to the young. He is not a bad fellow at all, if he can only have his way. Where he lives no one knows. It is supposed that he spends the days sleeping in some of the hills or under the ground. Although he is small, he is possessed with super-natural power and can do much to shape the fate of a person, either good or bad. Great care is therefore exercised to do what is known will please Nissen. Special attention must be given him Christmas eve. Should he come around after midnight and his favorite dish, romegrod, has not been placed outside near the door, trouble will result.

When the people awake in the morning, they can expect to find their cattle in a terrible condition. Nissen generally vents his vengeance on the animals of the farm. They will be tired the next day, showing that Nissen has been playing some prank with them, thereby keeping sleep from them. Articles in the barn will be found topsy turvy, while the horses have been turned around in their stall, but if the dish has been placed out for him he is happy. He shows his gratefulness in deeds. When the hired man in that case goes out to the barn Christmas morning, he may expect to find all his chores done. The horses have been curried so they look fine as silk, while the cows give twice their usual amount of milk. In many cases the wood has been split.

Many superstitions people on this occasion bar the door with a piece of steel.

They are afraid of him, and steel is the only thing that Nissen has no power over. He has often been known to have entered the house and stolen food. Many a hired girl can vouch for the fact that she has heard him climbing about on the shelves of the larder, and even in a few cases he has been seen.

The youth still in a manner retain the habits of their ancestry. At eventide they gather together from the small villages and visit their neighbors. As a rule, the ground at this time of year is heavily covered with snow, and the trip has to be made on skis. This is one of the most delightful features of the celebration. The ski is the national article of locomotion, and the boys and girls are adepts in the art of standing on them in the deep declines and rugged hills. The young people go from neighbor to neighbor gathering more of them. They have often no particular destination, but know they will end somewhere. When they come to some particularly large farmhouse, they drop their skis and go inside. Here everything is in readiness for them in the way of food, drink and music. The fiddler strikes up his merry tunes, and those present are hurled into a vortex of merriment.

In most parts of the country this feature is in no way marred, and the dance goes on until late in the morning, when the young go home, only to meet somewhere else the following night.

In some of the primitive parts of Norway, as Guldbrandsdalen and Voss, fights were indulged in by years gone by. This custom has not entirely changed, but the fatalities that were so common then do not exist now. Then when a couple went to one of these dances the girl would generally take her lover's funeral gown along, fully expecting that he would need it before the night had gone.

In the southern part of Sweden, Yuletide, a custom that is very beautiful, is recognized by the peasantry. The early morning mass at 4:30 Christmas day is attended by nearly every one. The members of the congregation have often as far as seven miles to walk through the snow. They come from all directions in delegations, each carrying a long pole upon which a piece of pitch is burning. As the surroundings are still in darkness, the sight of those moving lights toward one center is imposing. The hired man in this part of the country have a rather peculiar joke that they try to play upon each other Christmas morning. It is to try to get up early and go over to the neighbors and perform the chores of the hired man there before he gets up. Great delight is taken in the perpetration of this trick.

In the early part of the century it was a belief that on Christmas eve all the unnatural beings joined together in a grand carnival. They were led by Thor, the god of the elements, and they flew through the air, creating a terrible noise and often damage. Johan Welhaven's poem "Aagaardsvæsen" tells of a deed that was committed by this flock. It was Christmas eve, and a wedding was being celebrated. The bride was of the fairest and the bridegroom the worthiest. Many had been invited, and the general enjoyment was enhanced by the free flow of liquor. When every one was in a sleepy condition from its

SOAP BUBBLES.

Their Color and Their Wonderful Thinness Determined.

The extreme thinness of the bubble is indeed wonderful. It is estimated that the film in some places is only one three-millionths of an inch in thickness. Probably few of us can conceive of such thinness. Let us express it in another way. The Old and New Testament contain some three million letters. Now one three-millionth is such a part of an inch as the first letter of the Bible is a part of the sum of all its letters.

The bubble, however, is not of equal thickness at all points, and it is for this reason that it has the various colors. For instance, wherever the film is orange-red it measures about three one-millionths of an inch; where it is blue, eighty one-millionths of an inch; and at a point where tawny-yellow is prominent, about twenty one-millionths of an inch. Perhaps you wonder why the colors change from one part of the soap bubble to another. This is because the film of the soap-bubble evaporates and grows thinner, but unequally so at different points. A greenish blue with a pink-tinged spot that indicates an extreme thinness, and at such a point the film is ready to give way at the least jar.

You will be glad to know the source of the beautiful colors. Everyone is delighted with them, even if not interested in the explanation of their color. We may say that they come from in light. Light gives color to all objects, but not exactly as it does to the soap bubble. White light from the sun can be analyzed into the seven colors which we have seen in the rainbow. In that instance the rays separate it into its parts. A glass prism will do the same, as you may prove by looking through a glass pane from a lamp. When the light reaches the surface of the soap-bubble a part is reflected from it, and we see images on its surface as if it were a colored mirror. Another portion of the light, however, enters the film and is separated so that a part of the seven colors are thrown into the bubble, and we can see them in various portions of the bubble's surface. Another part of the light, after being broken by the film, is reflected by its inner surface back to our eyes, as that we see colors at the point where the colors enter—Jacob F. Butler, in St. Nicholas.

It has been discovered that if a steel wire and a silver fork are inserted into a large orange an electric current will be generated. If the end of the fork and the end of the wire sticking into the orange are connected with an electric measuring instrument, quite a perceptible current will be seen to pass. The same kind of a battery can be made by substituting a cucumber in place of the orange, in fact, any acid fruit can be used.

In order to make a voltaic pile it is only necessary to procure ten or more pieces of zinc about one inch square, and a number of pieces of copper, of a like number of pieces of paper. The paper should be thoroughly soaked in vinegar.

First, take a piece of zinc and place a piece of vinegar-soaked paper on it, then a piece of copper, then a piece of paper, then another zinc and then paper, and so on until all the pieces of zinc, copper and paper are used up. If the forefinger of one hand is held against one end and the forefinger of the other hand is held on the other end of the pile, quite a perceptible current will be felt. If several persons grasp hands and the persons on each end of the line touch the voltaic pile, the current will flow through the bodies of all those in position.

Canoe for Anxiety.

An eminent Oxford man was invited to dine with a Jewish master of Balliol, at the lodge. The butler, who hoped him to take off his coat, sighed deeply. "I am sorry to hear that," said the guest. "I hope you have no cause for anxiety." "No, sir; it's nothing," answered the butler, "only the master invited twelve to dine this evening, sir, and you are

Peterborough's Fire Record
Soon after ten o'clock yesterday morning the brigade received a call to Mrs. McIntosh's residence on George street, where the roof was in a blaze. The flames were quickly and promptly extinguished, and little damage was done. The trouble was caused by a defective chimney. Mrs. McIntosh, who is an invalid, was protected by the shock.

Its great healing and curative powers are possessed by no other remedy. Ask your druggist for Swayne's Ointment. Lyman, Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents. Avoid substitutes.

Valuable Horse Lost
An accident on the Trent Valley Canal near the Little Lake, where a coffin is being constructed, has resulted in the loss of a valuable horse. At about three o'clock yesterday afternoon, after a load had been "dumped," the horse slipped, and the weight of the cart pulled him back and he fell into the water. When the animal was pulled out five minutes later death had ensued.

Fire Sale at Messrs'
The recent fire at E. F. Mason & Co.'s has had the effect of slightly damaging by smoke the immense stock of groceries and provisions carried by this firm, and in order to facilitate removal and make room for new goods, a clearing sale has been inaugurated and is now in full swing. Everything must go, and at almost your own price. Don't procrastinate! Call to-day!

Miss Melville's New Premises

Miss Melville has removed her fancy goods business to handsome new premises on Hunter street, next door to Clark and Gibson's jewellery establishment. The new store is a most tasteful and helps very materially to enhance the appearance of the large and well-selected stock on view. The superior class of goods carried by Miss Melville and the exceedingly reasonable prices charged should substantially increase her already large trade. The reader when in search of anything in the fancy goods line, should certainly inspect Miss Melville's stock.

Those Who Object
Market Clerk Bapiste says that the new regulation requiring all meat and potatoes to be weighed on the public scales is causing lots of trouble. The chief kickers, however, are those who have small bags of potatoes. A bag of potatoes should weigh 91 1/4 pounds, whereas many of the so-called bags only tip the beam at 75 and 80 pounds. It is, Mr. Bapiste says, the dishonest dealer that objects to the weighing. We are glad that more scales are to be procured for the use of the clerk, as the present facilities for weighing are totally inadequate.

Observe the Postal Laws

The temptation to write a short message on the margin of a newspaper is sending through the mails to a friend, or to enclose correspondence or other matter which passes at a lower rate of postage than letters, should be withstood, as such breaches of the law are sometimes followed by the penalty exceeds the amount the average person would spend on postage in a life time. The fine is not more than $40 and not less than $10. Some people around Ottawa who have been defrauding the postal office in this way are being prosecuted. — Dundas Star.

Two Deaths

News reached town yesterday morning of the death at Kingston of Mrs. J. S. Potter, mother of Rev. J. C. Potter and Mr. Wm. Potter, of town. Her sons, who received a summons on Sunday to proceed to Kingston, arrived in time to cheer her last moments. The death of Hannah N. Mann, wife of Mr. W. G. Telford, took place yesterday, the cause of death being tubercular meningitis, following upon an attack of grip. Mrs. Telford, who was a sister of Miss Hattie E. Mann, of town, was an active church worker in the Baptist community. The funeral will take place this afternoon at two o'clock from the family residence, 208 5th concession of Smith, to the Little Lake cemetery.

A Man Over 25 Cents

To go to law over 25 cents' worth of land is a thing which deserves the censure of the courts, and justice Marchion took that view of it Thursday when, at Belleville, he heard the case of Greatrix vs. Mains, a dispute concerning a roadway which was diverted on to the land of the plaintiff by the township council and the defendant. His lordship commented strongly on the conduct of a solicitor who would advise the bringing of such an action. Ultimately the action was dismissed by consent without costs. We had a case in Peterborough at the last session of the Division Court where a local professional man was defendant in an action for 50 cents. He was "knocked out," and had to pay several dollars in costs.

The Reign of the Wheel

The limit of the bicycle's usefulness is not yet reached. Riders through the remote rural districts report that the fish dealer with his horn, baker and the pedlars of linens and other household furnishings are taking to the wheel. Representatives of each of the classes of itinerant named have been met on the road, pushing or another kind of cycle, instead of sleeping behind a lazy horse. Some use the tricycle carriers with a commodious compartment, others a single wheel and carry pack, while others have been noticed riding a tandem, and having his stores neatly packed in front, where the frame was of the dropped pattern. — Troy Press.

Burglary at Newwood

Burglars invaded Newwood Postoffice and J. B. Pearce & Son's store on Tuesday night and succeeded in making off with considerable booty. The safe was blown open by nitro glycerine, and stamps to the value of $200, together with about $175 in cash and $2000's worth of notes and valuable papers, were extracted. It is stated that a couple of questionable characters were around Newwood Tuesday were in Beaverton yesterday.

Noticed
Norwood folk must not be surprised at any depredations committed in their town so long as "guardian of peace" neglects to arrest a thief who has been "wanted" by the Peterborough police since 1893, and who is believed to have been harbored in their midst for the past two years.

Drowned at the Locks
A peculiar accident occurred yesterday evening about six o'clock, whereby a tenant of horses belonging to Mr. Welsh, brickmaker, of Otonabee, were drowned.

It appears that Mr. Welsh was shipping a quantity of brick to Hastings, and it was being loaded at the locks. The load had been transferred from the wagon to the scow, and the lines were fastened to the hub of the front wheel while the horses were left standing alone. They had just been taken out of the locks when the horses became restless and started to back up. The lines tightened, and the horses' wagon and all backed off into the locks, despite the frantic efforts of the driver to stop them.

The result was a valuable one and worth probably $200.

County Court
The spring session of County Court opened yesterday before Judge Weller, when the case of James White vs. Peterborough and Ashburnham Street Railway company was heard. The plaintiff in this case is the proprietor of the National Hotel, and he claimed the sum of $195, being the amount of costs incurred through a live guard wire breaking loose at the corner of King and George streets and coming in contact with the plaintiff's horses, killing one and badly injuring the other. The statement of defence alleged that it was through careless driving that the injury was received.

INSPECTOR'S REPORT.

The report of Mr. John Seath, Government Inspector, upon his annual visit of instruction to the Collegiate Institute, was presented, and we extract from it the following: "The physical laboratory is not yet properly fitted up for practical work by the pupils. Ventilation is much needed in the gymnasium. The English composition and the supplementary literature have not been in a satisfactory condition. The accommodations and equipments in physics are not first rate. No stenography is taught, and there are no drawing models. The general condition of the school is, as usual, very satisfactory. This management is good, and the order and tone are excellent. I trust that the time is not far distant when Peterborough will possess a collegiate institute building worthy of the town."

The Chairman spoke of the growing importance of shorthand instruction to fit children for commercial life.

The Board adjourned after a sitting lasting an hour.

—Mr. S. R. Callaway, a Canadian who began railroad work at $99100 a year, will succeed Mr. Chauncey McDeew as president of the Vanderbilt system of railways.

—The rate war between the Grand Trunk and C.P.R. lines is as keenly contested as ever. Since its commencement the representatives have met twelve times, and another conference will be held on April 15th, at New York.

—The C.P.R. Ontario division has issued its special summer freight tariff to points on the O.P.R. and connecting lines, taking effect April 1st, 1898, governed by the Canadian Joint Freight classification, as in effect at time of shipment.

—The C.P.R. expects a big Easter trade and are making arrangements to accommodate the heaviest passenger traffic yet handled. Cheap rates and extended time limits are the order this year.

—The C.P.R. is still sending large gangs of men to work on the Crow's Nest Pass railway. The men are being treated well, getting free transportation from Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto and other centres.

Mr. Varley, the Evangelist
Editor of the Times:
Sir—In view of Mr. Varley's visit to Peterborough, I may remark that the celebrated evangelist, who is receiving considerable notice in the press at present, is reported as pointing a moral at the expense of the Methodist Church by saying on the authority of some one, that it had but one of an increase in the city of London last year. That statement, I am pleased to say, is very far from correct. Our statistics are in our published minutes, and if he wishes for the correct figures I shall be glad to oblige him. In the meantime, if he can substantiate his statement, we nothing more solid than that unreal illustration. I fear for the success of his mission. Perhaps the Methodists are not in his favor, and he has received and repeated what appeared to their disadvantage. Yours, J. J. McElin.

"Whenever he saw a newspaper any pleasant notice of friends or acquaintances, a review of a book, a subject in which they were interested, he cut it out and kept the scraps in an envelope addressed to the person, and mailed them when several had accumulated."
